Shortage of Gas May Halt German Drive in France

Associated Press Writer Paints Word Picture of Great Battle

Editors: How the German might affect her motorized warfare and how French troops fought behind makeshift fortifications during the first shock of the attack are told in the following article by H. He returned to Paris yesterday from the battle zone.

By H. TAYLOR HENRY
Paris, May 19 (AP)—Belief that the extension of lines necessary to supply gasoline to the Nazi blitzkrieg machinery as it plunges deeper into France will slow it down automatically was expressed today by French military men.

They also place reliance on the increasing experience of the French troops in dealing with German methods.

To get a true picture of the fighting, French troops must be visualized in hastily-built individual trenches, perhaps only a yard deep, or crouched behind stones and hidden in clumps of bushes.

They are not, in the present fighting sector, behind long-prepared ramparts.

Forced To Take To Open
Forced into open warfare by the rapidity and unforeseen nature of the German advance, French units had to make preliminary resistance in country they had just commenced to fortify. Their line of more or less isolated posts, linked only by the crossing of their machine-gun and rifle fire, was attacked first by dive bombers and then machine-gunned.

Against narrow sections of this line, the Germans sent wave after wave of bombers, which opened the action in the early morning so that the sun at their backs would blind them.

Ciano Says Duce Will Tell Italy What To Do Next

Foreign Minister Declares Mussolini Will Speak When Ready

AIR RAID PRECAUTIONS ARE ORDERED IN ROME

Fascists Said To Believe Italy Will Soon Enter Conflict

Rome, May 19 (AP)—Italy "must say and will say" her word in European events, and only waits "the order of the day," Count Galeazzo Ciano, foreign minister, told the Italian people today as air raid precautions were ordered for areas in the northern part of the country, facing France.

"Italy cannot remain a stranger to events in European life," Ciano said in a speech at Milan, but the people must wait until Mussolini speaks to know what to do next.

"Italy of the Ethiopian undertaking and victories in Spain is not a stranger nor can it be a stranger to events in European life in which Rome must say and will say its word," he continued.

Ciano spoke briefly on the first anniversary of the signing of "the pact of steel," the Italian-German military alliance.

Mussolini May Speak

While Ciano was speaking in Milan a rumor circulated in Rome that Premier Mussolini was planning to speak tomorrow night from his balcony at the Palazzo Venezia.

It was in the spirit of her victory, Ciano said, that Italy was hastening "these new tasks for which it will be called."

These tasks, he said, were dictated by "the necessity of finally achieving our aspirations."

Italy, he said, in what appeared to be a reference to the alliance with Germany, "intends to keep faith in her engagements and likewise her greater destiny."

Il Duce

Ciano said he knew the people would not expect him to say more because "the order of the day will come to us all from Il Duce when he will have decided upon it."

"And when he gives it," Ciano continued, "Milan will leap once again to its feet."

The foreign minister spoke at a time when Fascists hinted Italy was being drawn to the brink of war by German successes on the western front.

Blackouts and air raid defense experiments were ordered to begin tomorrow in the important industrial areas of Milan and Turin, close to the French frontier.

These were the first precautions of that kind since Italy adopted her policy of non-belligerency at the start of the European war last September.

Roosevelt May Name Knox and Landon to Posts in Cabinet

New York, May 19 (AP)—The New York Times says that President Roosevelt is "seriously considering the appointment of several prominent Republicans to secretariats in a coalition cabinet."

The Times says there is a "strong possibility" that the president, "faced with widespread national concern over the developments of the European war," in the immediate future would name Col. Frank Knox, Chicago publisher, secretary of the navy.

Colonel Knox was Republican vice presidential nominee in 1936. The present secretary of the navy, Charles Edison, is the state Democratic organization's candidate for governor in New Jersey and is expected to resign shortly, the paper adds.

Raising the possibility that Alf M. Landon of Kansas would be offered the post of secretary of war by President Roosevelt, the Times says:

"It was viewed here as especially significant that Alf M. Landon, Republican presidential nominee in 1936 and titular head of the party, would call on the president at the White House Wednesday at his invitation."

Board To Speed Armament Asked By Two Senators

George and Connally Would Relax Labor Legislation

Washington, May 19 (AP)—Creation of an industrial-labor-military board to seek teamwork in the nation's vast rearmament effort was proposed by two Democratic senators today as Congressional committees prepared to speed defense funds and special legislation.

The special legislation, permitting relaxation of New Deal labor legislation and certain profit limitations in naval construction, comes before the House Naval Committee for formal action tomorrow. Committee members have already indicated informally that they would recommend its passage.

At the same time tomorrow the full Senate appropriations committee will consider the $1,827,491,724 army supply bill which a subcommittee whipped into shape last week. This measure, carrying the army's share of the extraordinary $1,182,000,000 defense fund asked by President Roosevelt, is expected to reach the Senate floor by Tuesday.

The appointment of industrialists, labor representatives and army and navy officials to a board charged with co-ordinating the production of war equipment was advocated by Senators George (D-Ga.) and Connally (D-Texas). Both are members of the Senate Foreign Relations and Finance Committees.

Face Difficult Task

George told reporters that industry faced a tremendous expansion and an immense technical task in carrying out the extraordinary defense program.

Saying the board might be established voluntarily without the necessity of legislation, he suggested that it should be given only limited authority to direct industrial expansion. It should not, the Georgian declared, be cloaked with the all-inclusive powers delegated to the World War Industries board.

Connally said he thought an ad-

Lindbergh Calls for an End of Hysterical Chatter of Calamity

Washington, May 19 (AP)—Calling for an end to "hysterical chatter of calamity and invasion," Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh told the American people tonight that they need have no fear of attack unless they bring it on through quarrel and meddling with affairs abroad.

FDR Joins Hull In Program for Peace in World

Both Declare Nations Must Have "Liberal" Economic Policies

Washington, May 19 (AP)—President Roosevelt joined Secretary Hull tonight in contending that hopes of future world peace were dependent upon the ultimate adoption of "liberal" economic policies by nations generally.

In a message read by the secretary of state in a broadcast celebrating foreign trade week, Mr. Roosevelt said the promotion of such policies would continue to be "a vital part and a dominant purpose of the foreign policy of the United States."

"In this way, and in this way alone, can the United States contribute to the economic reconstruction of the world when the destruction now going on shall have ceased," the president declared.

Hull Sounds Warning

Hull warned that if the doctrines of "totalitarian autarchy"—"so ominously spreading today"—became widely dominant in international trade relations mankind would be plunged "into a period of chaos and impoverishment, and inevitably, into moral and spiritual decay."

The principles underlying the administration's trade agreements program, he asserted, "offer the only possible basis on which the economic life of the world can be successfully rebuilt when the present wars are over."

The trade agreements program provides a means of bargaining with the other countries for reciprocal tariff reductions.

Prime Minister Says Both Sides Are Fighting behind Lines

London, May 19 (AP) (By Radio)—Prime Minister Winston Churchill told the nation tonight that German and Allied forces were fighting behind each other's lines on the Western front.

Thus he described both sides as in "an extremely dangerous position," but predicted "stabilization" of the front "which will enable the qualities of the French and British soldiers to be matched squarely against those of their adversaries."

In a ten-minute radio address, Churchill declared that "mastery can only be regained by a furious and unrelenting assault."

"It would be foolish to disguise the gravity of the hour," he said, predicting the war would turn to the British Isles "after this battle in France abates its force."

"For myself," he said, "I have invincible confidence in the French army and its leaders. Only a very small part of that splendid army has yet been heavily engaged."

"There is good evidence to show that practically the whole of the specialized and mechanized forces of the enemy have already been thrown into the conflict."

Report Air Victories

Claiming destruction of "three or four" German planes to every one Allied plane lost, Churchill said "the relative balance of the British and German air forces is now considerably more favorable to us than at the beginning of the battle."

He declared that British planes were "striking mightily" at the source of Germany's mechanized power and had inflicted "serious damage" upon that nation's valuable oil refineries.

Making his first address to the nation as prime minister, the former First Lord of the Admiralty, speaking quietly and deliberately, said that "we must not allow ourselves to be intimidated by these German armed vehicles before our lines."

His address was rebroadcast by the three large American networks.

There is "a serious need for vital munitions," he said, predicting that after the current warfare in France "there will be a battle in these islands."

Solemn Hour for Allies

He mentioned that his address came "in a solemn hour for the life of our country, of our own power, of our Allies, and above all, of the cause of freedom."

"The Germans by remarkable combination of their bombing and heavily armored tanks have broken through the French defense north of the Maginot line, and strong columns of their armored vehicles are razing the open country and for the first day or two met without defenders."

"But a sudden transformation of the scene might come into being... but it would be foolish to assume a well-equipped mechanized force such as our could be overcome in a few weeks by such a sloop."

"The relative strength of the air forces is considerably more in our favor than at the beginning of the battle. Our heavy bombers are striking mightily at the supply bases of German power."

Berlin Declares Allies Are Falling Back; Claim 100,000 Prisoners Taken

Hitler's Powerful War Machine Continues To Advance Toward Paris and the North Sea Coast; Maginot Line Fort Captured by Mechanized Invaders after Hard Battle

London, May 20 (Monday) (AP)—The British general headquarters reported this morning on Sunday operations in Belgium that "the British front was held today successfully in the face of enemy pressure."

The communique was in almost the same words as those reporting the action of Saturday.

By EDWIN SHANKE

Berlin, May 19 (AP)—The Allies, under heavy German pressure, were said tonight to be losing ground all along the Belgian and French fronts, having yielded more than 100,000 prisoners and suffered heavy casualties.

As Adolf Hitler's mighty war machine rolled southward into France and westward toward the North Sea coast facing England, Nazi military experts were elated particularly by capture of "fort 505" in the Maginot line.

Seizure of the fortification "in the fight northwest of Montmedy" was reported in the high command's communique.

DNB, official German news agency, described the fortification as one of France's strongest and indicated it was taken by storm.

Attacking Germans threw their full force at the fort despite heavy defense fire, DNB said, in contrast to the sudden German capture of Fort Eben Emael in Belgium by use of a new, secret weapon.

(Montmedy, west of France's frontier with Luxembourg, is in a fortified belt north of the Maginot line which, the Allies say, ends at Luxembourg.)

Takes Over Lost Territory

Hitler, meanwhile, erased another Versailles "dictate" by reincorporating into Germany the Eupen-Malmedy-Moresnet territory lost to Belgium in the World War settlement.

The high command, reporting rising numbers of Allied prisoners and increasing quantities of captured war booty, declared that "up to now not counting the Dutch army, prisoners number 110,000 and count- less artillery up to 26-centimeter (11-inch) guns have been captured."

Allied losses also have been heavy, DNB said, particularly because of air and tank attacks on retreating columns. On the other hand, it reported, German losses during the lightning advance have been "relatively small."

In contrast to the World War attack southwest of Brussels Saturday night, DNB official German were open and fought over for weeks, the agency explained, in this war even the most formidable obstacles simply are being overrun.

It admitted, however, that heavier losses may have been necessary at certain isolated points.

Allied Plane Downed

One enemy warplane was shot down during an Allied raid Saturday night on Hamburg, DNB reported. No damage was done there were no injuries and the raiders were chased away, it said.

(The British reported bombing German oil storage tanks at Hamburg, Hamburg and Bremen.)

After striking deeply toward the heart of France with motorized armored units, the high command reported, the Germans moved up heavy forces along an expanded fifty-five mile front with its spearhead in St. Quentin.

(The French acknowledged only that German and Allied forces had clashed on the outskirts of St. Quentin.)

The German communique said the Germans held St. Quentin as an arrowhead whose flanks stretched northeast through Le Chateau and Hitler, meanwhile, erased another Versailles "dictate" by reincorporating into Germany the Eupen-Malmedy-Moresnet territory lost to Belgium in the World War settlement.

On the northern Belgian front, the high command said the Germans were driving the Allies back a march to the sea.

After the fall of Antwerp and Brussels, it reported, the advance continued toward the Belgian city of Ghent, about twenty-five miles south of the nearest point on the North Sea coast, with the Nazis attacking the Scheldt river west of Antwerp and at the Dender river sector of Brussels.

Twenty Allied tanks were destroyed when the Germans turned anti-aircraft artillery on them at point blank to beat off an armored car attack southwest of Brussels Saturday night, DNB, official German news agency declared.

Armored units, and especially, warplanes have been the trail blazers in the Nazi advances, the high command said. It credited the air force with harassing the retreating Allies by striking at communications in their rear and reported only twenty-seven German planes missing in yesterday's operations to Allied losses of 147.

Hitler decreed the reincorporation into the Reich of Eupen, Malmedy and Moresnet, a tiny eastern segment of Belgium carved by the Versailles treaty from Germany's Rhineland.

(The three little districts, taken from Germany to satisfy the Belgians' post-war demands for protection and reparations, have a combined area of 384 square miles and a total population of about 64,000.)

New Holland Commander
Further consolidating the Nazi conquest in the low countries, Hitler appointed Arthur Seyss-Inquart, who had been deputy governor of German-occupied Poland, as Reichskommissar for the Netherlands.

Hitler made a specific point of his treatment of the Belgian territories, pointing out that they were not "annexed" but "incorporated."

100,000 Reported Killed by Nazi Bombers in Raids on Rotterdam

London, May 19 (AP)—At least 100,000 people were killed and a third of Rotterdam destroyed when the Germans bombed that Netherlands seaport before its surrender, a Dutch communique from Paris, as quoted by British news agency dispatches, said today.

Two squadrons of German bombers delivered action bombs five over Rotterdam in close formation, the communique said, dropping a deadly cargo of heavy bombs that "ploughed a veritable furrow of destruction."

Scenes reminiscent of Dante's "Inferno" ensued, with fires and explosions "everywhere," the communique related.

Bombing operations were conducted from an estimated 4,500 feet. Buildings over an area of more than five square miles were destroyed, the communique added.

"A moderate estimate," it continued, "is that in this monstrous work of destruction, horrifying as a nightmare, and absolutely without precedent, at least 100,000 people must have perished."

French and Nazi Troops Withdraw From Swiss Line

Germans Rumored To Plan To Trick French Into Moving

By CHARLES S. FOLTZ, Jr.

Basel, Switzerland, May 19 (AP)—German forces concentrated in Swiss frontier regions moved their armored cars and light tanks away from the immediate border sector today, but where they went was a German secret.

Some observers expressed belief that they had sped northward toward the battlefields of Belgium and France.

Others, however, speculated that it was a ruse to lead the French into sending their mountain forces into the northwestern battle, and that the Germans actually had withdrawn only a few miles.

The French countered by removing similar equipment from immediate border regions, but there, too, it could not be learned whether they went where they were needed most, or whether they merely remained on guard out of sight.

Despite the German movement from Baden, Wurttemberg and Bavaria, small forces of troops known to have been concentrated there still could be seen from Switzerland.

Although it was believed they might be only small groups left behind, the Swiss took no chances and kept all their forces mobilized, granted no leaves and kept a road patrol on duty against the possibility of fifth column activities.

The Swiss command also enforced a federal decree requiring all armament factories in the country have been working for any of the belated events to turn over all stocks and present output to the army for safekeeping.

defenders until the planes were on them.

The new-type German bomber is a twin-engine Junkers 88, which can dive from 4,000 feet almost straight down to fifty feet at 400 miles an hour.

Planes Attacked in Waves

The first warning that a sector chosen by the Germans was under attack came when 300 to 400 bombers dived in successive formations of three, striking at French positions almost literally from just overhead.

The planes attacked in one wave after the other, aiming with uncanny accuracy at the nests dug out by the French soldiers. By the time the third or fourth wave had dived with its load of bombs, the first wave had wheeled and dived again to spray the line with machine-gun fire.

I have been in sectors dived-bombed and then machine-gunned in the blitzkrieg on the northern front and I know the effect.

The first several times it is demoralizing. After that one becomes more or less hardened. That is naturally what the unexpectedness of the German attack did to the French soldier. Now that the first shock is over, he is holding more firm.

After the planes came the famed Panzer divisions of tanks attacking in line almost side by side. These armored divisions are formed of 300 to 400 heavy tanks.

As many as eight to ten divisions were used on a single narrow sector.

Rake French Lines

They swept over what was left of the French lines spurring flame 100 yards ahead of them and raking the ground with fire from automatic weapons.

As the tanks rumbled through, they wheeled and struck the neighboring section of the line from the rear. If it could have been seen from above, the track they made would have looked like an in-and-out curve.

Behind the tanks, Nazi light infantry divisions poured into the holes, rushed up in scout cars and armored trucks to take over and organize the ground while the planes and tanks went on to strike at ever-widening sides of the pocket.

Through the holes made in the French lines, squads of specially trained shock troops raced on motorcycles, mounted with machine-guns, to dash up and down the highways, firing on the re-forming French troops until they were captured.

So hard was the initial shock that the French troops were pulled back there six lines were captured.

Goodall Tourney Is Won by Hogan; Snead Is Second

Little Texan Shoots Brilliant Round in Nosing Out Snead

By GAYLE TALBOT

New York, May 19 (AP)—They threatened Ben Hogan late today and Ben replied like a true champion to win the Goodall Robin golf tournament with a thrilling final round of sixty-nine over Fresh Meadows course.

After having led the parade of crack professionals for five rounds of match play, the slender boy from Texas found Sam Snead, the mountaineer, breathing on his neck in the straight-away. His lead was menaced. Hogan bowed his lame back to blaze around the final nine in thirty-three strokes and take first prize of $1,000.

The finish was far closer than anyone had anticipated. Hogan began the final day with an apparently unobtainable total of twenty-four "plus" points against eight owned by Gene Sarazen, doughty little veteran in second place.

But after the morning round, where Hogan soared to seventy-three strokes, he had a score of only nineteen points against Snead's eleven. A crowd of more than 4,000 trampled the course in the afternoon watching for Hogan to crack and for Snead to catch him. For a time it seemed the leader might be overtaken, but when they hit the stretch Hogan proved his new-found class. He takes his place now alongside those other Texas links titans—Ralph Guldahl, Byron Nelson, Dick Metz and Jimmy Demaret.

Hogan shot seven rounds of match play in 491 strokes, one over par for the exacting Fresh Meadows layout. He was two strokes under Harry Cooper's winning total of a year ago.

Hogan's final "plus" score was twenty-three, meaning he won that many more holes than he lost in the seven rounds against star competition. He won ten matches while losing four, which is a noble average.

Snead's 71—69 on the last day gave him second prize of $750. He finished with a plus score of 19, picking up twelve points in his last two rounds. He waxed fat in the afternoon at the expense of Jimmy Thomson and Clayton Heafner.

Gene Sarazen won third money, $350, with seven points above the board. Dick Metz turned in two great rounds of 68-69 today to finish with five points and win fourth money, $450.

Canton Qualifies For 500-Mile Race

Indianapolis, May 19 (AP)—William (Shorty) Canton of Detroit earned his place today in the starting line-up for the May 30 Indianapolis motor speedway 500-mile race.

Canton, a veteran driver, was the only one to qualify for the race today as a strong wind kept most of the cars off the track.

Canton drove his 10-lap qualifying test at a speed of 123.376 miles an hour and will have the outside position in the fourth row. He was the twelfth driver to qualify, leaving 21 places still remaining to be filled.

George Connor, of San Bernardino, Calif., ran one lap of his test but quit because the car developed motor trouble. He still has two more chances.

A crowd of 20,000 fans had a thrill when Floyd Davis, of Springfield, Ill., went into a spin on the north turn while turning a practice lap. The car skidded to the wall before Davis brought it under control. He drove it into the pits. The strong wind was blamed for the accident.

The car is a four-cylinder speedster entered by Anthony Gulotta, of Kansas City.

Speedway officials announced the qualifying runs would be resumed Wednesday.

dation to Congress that the nation plan for an air force of 50,000 planes, he said:

"Until we have decided upon a definite policy of defense, the mere construction of large numbers of aircraft will not be adequate for our national safety."

Need Greater Air Force

"We need a greater air force, a greater army, and a greater navy, they have been inadequate for many years," the famous flyer added.

"Let us form with our neighboring nations a clear cut and definite policy of American defense. But above all, let us stop this hysterical chatter of calamity and invasion that has been running like these last few days. It is not befitting to the people who built this nation."

Colonel Lindbergh contended that "the course we have been following in recent months leads to neither strength nor friendship nor peace." "It will leave us hated by the victor and vanquished alike, regardless of which way the tide of battle turns. One side will claim that we aided its enemies; the other, that we did not help enough."

"Stop Asking for War"

"Regardless of which side wins this war," he said, "there is no reason, aside from our own actions, to prevent a continuation of peaceful relationships between America and the countries of Europe."

"If we desire peace, we need only stop asking for war. No one wishes to attack us, and no one is in a position to do so."

Colonel Lindbergh voiced his views on aerial defenses two days after the president in a message stressing "the possibility of attack on vital American zones," submitted to Congress a request for $1,182,000,000 for arms.

He spoke on the eve of the thirtieth anniversary of the start of his famous New-York-to-Paris flight.

In Europe, he said, the development of air power had affected England adversely and Germany advantageously. For America he continued, aviation was an asset, adding to her national safety.

the worst damaged of the valley cities. At least half the buildings in its main business district of eight square blocks may have to be entirely reconstructed. The shock slipped scores of homes from their foundations and toppled almost every chimney.

His chief man snapped in two, Bravely will be without gas for an indefinite period. Holtville, like Imperial, lost its water tank, a tower nearly 100 feet high and storing 100,000 gallons.

After-shocks continued at close intervals today. Special police and sheriff's deputies guarded the devastated areas, most of which were roped off.

Police and city engineers, who compiled the damage estimate, emphasized that a definite total could not be reached until all structures are closely checked, but indicated $2,500,000 was a conservative figure.

At Weathersburg a heavy rain broke up the contest after the fifth frame had been completed with the teams deadlocked at 15-15, the downpour of rain following the downpour of base hits and flood of runs.

Legion Official Would Publicize 8,000 Communists

Dawson To Ask Brawley Post To Publish Names of Petition Signers

Charleston, W. Va., May 19 (AP)—Commander C. G. Dawson announced today he would ask John Brawley Post of the American Legion, to sponsor publication in pamphlet form the names of the 8,000 persons who signed a petition requesting a place on the state general election ballot for the Communist ticket.

"It would certainly be a salutary thing were we here in West Virginia to know just who, in our various communities, are avowed Communists," said Dawson.

He said the names should be distributed to every Legion post, "the various units of the department of public safety, and the law enforcement officers of the state generally."

"In this way," Dawson's statement continued, "the public eye can be focused upon those who, for one reason or another, would import into our society an alien, 'bom'."

He pointed out that four persons already have filed affidavits with the secretary of state declaring they signed the petition believing it to be a "third term" call for President Roosevelt, and urged prosecution of persons engaged "in such misrepresentations" if any statute has been violated.

The Dies committee of the house of representatives, which is investigating un-American activities, requested a copy of the list of signers last week.

being regarded as "occupied enemy land."

Seys-Inquart was authorized to carry out his administration with the aid of Dutch authorities. It was said that law existing in the Netherlands would remain in force in so far as it is compatible with the occupation.

Military and sovereign rights will be exercised in Holland by the German army commander there who will have the right to prescribe measures necessary for military operations and security.

Authorities said that, aside from press reports, they knew nothing of the protest by the United States and twenty other American republics against the German march into the low countries, hence there could be no official reaction.

High Nazi sources, however, expressed belief that the Americas had misdirected the note.

"It should have gone to England and France, who really violated the neutrality of Belgium and Holland," they said. "The German action was just a counter-move."

Going into the seventh inning, Baptist led Trinity 4-3 but after the Baptist batted seven runs, Trinity came back with eight to tie the score. A double by "Woody" Lewis was the only blow yielded by Wharton. He was robbed of a shutout by two consecutive errors.

E. Randall and Evans of Grace and Teets and Miller of Evangelical had homers.

Board To Review Facts and Figures For Tax Purposes

West Virginia Railroads and Express Companies Get Hearings Today

Charleston, W. Va., May 19 (AP)—Representatives of the public utility companies operating in West Virginia will go before the state board of public works, starting tomorrow, to give facts and figures for the determination of their 1940 valuations for tax purposes.

For three days the seven elective officials will listen to arguments and consider briefs before fixing the valuations which bring in a great portion of the state's revenues.

Last year the board valued all the operating utilities at a total of $384,456,000, which represented a net tangible increase of almost $2,000,000 over the previous year.

The railroads and express companies will appear before the board tomorrow.

In the past, the West Virginia Railroad Association has presented a blanket brief on behalf of its members, usually seeking a reduction.

A year ago, only the Baltimore and Ohio was granted a decrease in its assessment figure. The cut amounted to $1,000,000 for the second straight year.

Last year the board's valuation of $78,500,000 for the Chesapeake and Ohio again placed it as the state's largest taxpayer.

Street railways—and there are very few left in West Virginia—car line, toll bridge and water, gas and electric companies will be heard on Tuesday. On Wednesday, oil and gas lines, telephone, telegraph and bus lines are scheduled for appearances.

The board's figures usually are not announced before the middle of June.

military spokesmen described the battle from the Oise canal to the Sambre river.

In Berlin, the German high command said St. Quentin had been captured. The city of 50,000 persons was held by the Germans during the World War from the end of August, 1914, to Oct. 1, 1918.

French counter-attacks in the Maubeuge region, fifteen miles north of Landreies and within ten miles of the French-Belgian border, resulted in recapture of a number of positions, the military commentator said.

Allied Retreat Explained

In Belgium, he added, the withdrawal of British and Belgian troops was "progressing satisfactorily." The Allied forces in Belgium were said to be dropping back in a maneuver to keep the battle line straight.

At the southern extremity of the German thrust into France, the French held their positions and repulsed several villages near Rethel in counter-attacks.

The German pocket in France now is about 80 miles wide at its greatest width and varies in depth between 30 and 50 miles. Its deepest penetration is about seventy-five miles from Paris.

Between Guise and Landreies, where the Germans are attacking with massed tanks supported by hundreds of planes and a great quantity of artillery, the battle started again with daylight after waxing furious all through Saturday.

As the attack between Guise and Landreies increased in intensity, it was estimated the Germans had thrown five motorized divisions making up an entire army corps into the fray.

(A motorized division normally contains about 12,000 men.)

Old Germans Continue To Lead in Tri-County

The Cumberland Old German won another Tri-State League game yesterday at Barreville, defeating the home club 15-3. It was the third straight for the Germans who got off to an early start by pushing over one in the first and four in the second. They added another in the third and went to town in the next two frames with five and then four before slackening off to four goose-eggs. Barreville scored one in the second and two in the fourth.

Derl Keller, the winners' ace moundsman, fanned eight and allowed eight hits, while the Germans were gathering 18 safeties off Leitch and Cunningham.

At Rainsburg the home team hammered out 19 hits to beat Flintstone 17 to 8, while at Paw Paw the Grantsville club turned on some real power to defeat Paw Paw 9 to 1 in either Tri-County League games. The line score of the game at Rainsburg was not available.

The line scores:

Graduation Is Often a Burden On Many Parents

Some Rackets Student Can Avoid Are Explained by Educator

By GARRY C. MYERS, Ph. D.

Too often graduation, especially from high school, proves a heavy burden to the parents. If, for example a certain kind of suit or dress is prescribed for all graduates at commencement, some parents can hardly find the money, or will have to do so at excessive sacrifice. Wisely, some school principals see to it that clothes for graduation must be simple and inexpensive.

Much may be said in favor of the classic gown, which can be rented. Even then some families can't afford the cost, and there should be a school fund for indigent youths to tap without their classmates knowing they must be helped in this manner.

Forced to Sacrifice

Undue pressure is often brought upon parents to pay also for such things as class books, class pin, or class ring. While the purchase of these luxuries is rarely required, those children who don't get them must endure deep humiliation. Too often the pressure from the group led by children of the more privileged parents, under the guise of class loyalty and school patriotism is so great that parents are forced against their will to make the sacrifice. Sometimes the ensuing parent-child conflict is tragic.

Before and after graduation, hundreds and hundreds of youths in this country and their parents, will be approached by high pressure salesmen of correspondence courses. A few of these courses may be good, others won't.

Sinister are some of the rackets. For example, a graduate may be told that because he ranked so high in his class, or was so faithful a student, that he is being given a scholarship. He will have to pay only for the books to be used (valued at from $50 to $250). See the appeal to vanity! Thus his parents may be signed up for an obligation for several hundred dollars, some paid at once, the rest in monthly installments. What is paid for the books may be many times what they are worth.

The high pressure salesman or agent insists on an immediate "sign here." Often these propositions prove to be wholly worthless. Sometimes the agent represents a nearby "business school," selling a course to be paid for in advance. Reputable schools don't do this. Wise parents and students won't be lured into such a net.

Don't Be Deceived

Let no one be deceived. Pay nothing, sign nothing until after you have carefully investigated. There is no hurry. You have lots of time. First try to get in touch with your school principal. Failing to find him, write a letter of enquiry to the U. S. Office of Education, Washington, D. C. Technical fields being exploited are already overcrowded, and a vacancy in either field is not likely to be filled by a person taking a short course even at a school where there are available many engineers who have spent years and years at training.

In case you would like to have a selected list of books on vocation, write me in care of this paper, enclosing a self-addressed envelope with a three-cent stamp on it.

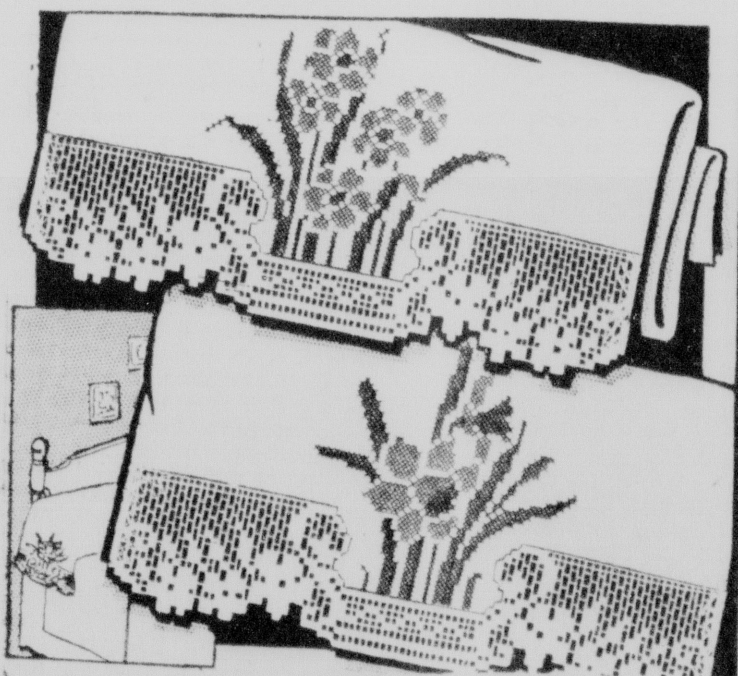

Tomorrow: After graduation, what?

HIGH PRESSURE

The Beautiful Heiress in Room 240 Had the Hospital in an Uproar until She Found Her Man

By JAMES O'HARA

"The head resident will be up in 240 to check Miss Barry's chart in a few moments, Dr. O'Keefe," Nurse Dixon reminded with her most maternal tone as young Jimmy O'Keefe stopped at the bulletin board. She added, sarcastically, "Rich and beautiful young patients just aren't kept waiting—not in this hospital!"

"Listen, Dixon, to what our young Irish friend McGrath tacked up here—Will the person who took my blood pressure gauge please return it or come back and get the case!"

The head nurse turned up her nose in impatience at Jimmy, despite the fact that he was her unconscious darling.

"Well?"

"That Hibernian sarcasm is directed at me, Dixon," he flung out.

Are You Always So Formal?

"I'm checking Goldilocks with that machine!"

"Humph! It isn't lost, then," she hurried off worriedly, the familiar little wonder returning as to what he and the glamour girl found so interesting to discuss when handsome Dr. O'Keefe was taking her blood pressure twice daily. It worried her. "You can return it later!"

"Dixon's right about watching my step," O'Keefe admitted to himself when the elevator was taking him upstairs to the large, sunny private room where his blonde charge was lying. "Boy! If I got taken off this case it would be a long time before I got a chance to make good with a good-looking heiress!"

"Good morning, Miss Barry," he flashed the old O'Keefe charm as he opened the door. "How's the little nervous collapse progressing this morning?" He allowed himself a thankful little sigh of relief as he tied the rubber pad of the pressure machine about her rounded upper arm.

"Are you always so formal with your patients, doctor?" She smiled the way she did with all men—just in case. "You make me feel like an old hag!"

"I'd tell you that you looked too beautiful to be true if I dared," he said, hopefully, "if the rules of this institution permitted. So I can't!"

"And I'd probably believe you. In the surgery annex young Dr. McGrath was at the moment having an acute case of high blood pressure, too."

"You young nitwits who come here to learn to be medical men are all the same!" The head surgeon was having his habitual fit of cholera after breakfast. He imitated a penitent young intern in his pantomime. "Doctor, I can't find my blood pressure machine! Have you seen it?"

"It disappeared, sir," Dr. McGrath took the dressing-down as best he could. "I'll get another as quickly as I can." That was wishful thinking, he knew. They cost the sum of $25—immeasurable to a poor intern!

"If your brain tumor case dies in the meantime it will be just another one of those unfortunate accidents," the head surgeon said. "For this once you may use mine—and I've half a notion to have you placed on the suspension roll for inexcusable negligence!"

"Thank you, sir!" was all McGrath could say.

"I'm sure that you're glad to be going home, Miss Barry," Head Nurse Dixon announced with a placidly which camouflaged her guile as she checked the girl's effects. "I'm sure that I'm happy to see you leaving so soon. Pretty young women like you shouldn't be in hospital."

"There couldn't have been a pleasanter place in which to be ill, nurse," the young heiress assured her. "If you would tell me the custom of rewarding services here which I've received..."

Nurse Dixon flicked an imaginary fleck of dust from the medicine table as she thought. The empty blood pressure case still lay on the table and the little silver plate carried the name of Dr. McGrath!

"The staff are not allowed to accept gratuities, Miss Barry," she said a bit crisply. "But that young man who owns the case on the table—"

Nurse Dixon flicked an imaginary fleck of dust from the medicine table as she thought. The empty blood pressure case still lay on the table and the little silver plate carried the name of Dr. McGrath!

"The staff are not allowed to accept gratuities, Miss Barry," she said a bit crisply. "But that young man who owns the case on the table—"

placidly which camouflaged her guile as she checked the girl's effects. "I'm sure that I'm happy to see you leaving so soon. Pretty young women like you shouldn't be in hospital."

"There couldn't have been a pleasanter place in which to be ill, nurse," the young heiress assured her. "If you would tell me the custom of rewarding services here which I've received..."

Marian Martin

9404

When you want to play your trump card for special dates, wear this sweet-and-young dress. For Marian Martin has given Pattern 9404 a beguiling collar to make a radiant frame for your face. Isn't it refreshing in eyelet embroidery, surrounded by a wire froth of ruffling? It's becoming, too, in self-fabric, perhaps edged with ric-rac. A perky bow and tiny buttons add gaiety. This style is very simple, with well-cut lines and double front panels in the flared skirt. Isn't the picture white pique dress with its white eyelet collar smart? Dark sheer with frosty-white would be attractive, too.

Pattern 9404 may be ordered only in misses' and women's sizes 12, 14.

Graduation Is Often a Burden On Many Parents

Some Rackets Student Can Avoid Are Explained by Educator

By GARRY C. MYERS, Ph. D.

Too often graduation, especially from high school, proves a heavy burden to the parents. If, for example a certain kind of suit or dress is prescribed for all graduates at commencement, some parents can hardly find the money, or will have to do so at excessive sacrifice. Wisely, some school principals see to it that clothes for graduation must be simple and inexpensive.

Much may be said in favor of the classic gown, which can be rented. Even then some families can't afford the cost, and there should be a school fund for indigent youths to tap without their classmates knowing they must be helped in this manner.

Forced to Sacrifice

Undue pressure is often brought upon parents to pay also for such things as class books, class pin, or class ring. While the purchase of these luxuries is rarely required, those children who don't get them may endure deep humiliation. Too often the pressure from the group led by children of the more privileged parents, under the guise of class loyalty and school patriotism is so great that parents are forced against their will to make the sacrifice. Sometimes the ensuing parent-child conflict is tragic.

Before and after graduation, hundreds and hundreds of youths in this country and their parents, will be approached by high pressure salesmen of correspondence courses. A few of these courses may be good; others won't.

Sinister are some of the rackets. For example, a graduate may be told that because he ranked so high in his class, or was so faithful a student, that he is being given a scholarship. He will have to pay only for the books to be used (valued at from $50 to $250). See the appeal to vanity! Thus his parents may be signed up for an obligation for several hundred dollars, some paid at once, the rest in monthly installments. What is paid for the books may be many times what they are worth.

The high pressure salesman or agent insists on an immediate "sign here." Often these propositions prove to be wholly worthless. Sometimes the agent represents a nearby "business school," selling a course to be paid for in advance. Reputable schools don't do this. Wise parents and students won't be lured into such a net.

Don't Be Deceived

Let no one be deceived. Pay nothing, sign nothing until after you have carefully investigated. There is no hurry. You have lots of time. First try to get in touch with your school principal. Failing to find him, write a letter of enquiry to the U. S. Office of Education, Washington, D. C. Technical fields being exploited are already overcrowded, and a vacancy in either field is not likely to be filled by a person taking a short course even at a school when there are available many engineers who have spent years and years at training.

In case you would like to have a selected list of books on vocation, write me in care of this paper, enclosing a self-addressed envelope with a three-cent stamp on it.

The Beautiful Heiress in Room 240 Had the Hospital in an Uproar until She Found Her Man

By JAMES O'HARA

"The head resident will be up in 240 to check Miss Barry's chart in a few moments, Dr. O'Keefe," Nurse Dixon reminded with her most maternal tone as young Jimmy O'Keefe stopped at the bulletin board. She added, sarcastically, "Rich and beautiful young patients just aren't kept waiting—not in this hospital!"

"Listen, Dixon, to what our young Irish friend McGrath tacked up here—Will the person who took my blood pressure gauge please return it or come back and get the case?"

The head nurse turned up her nose in impatience at Jimmy, despite the fact that he was her unconscious darling.

"Well?"

"That Hibernian sarcasm is directed at me, Dixon," he flung out.

Are You Always So Formal?

"I'm checking Goldilocks with that machine!"

"Humph! It isn't lost, then," she hurried off worriedly, the familiar little wonder returning as to what he and the glamour girl found so interesting to discuss when hand-some Dr. O'Keefe was taking her blood pressure twice daily. It worried her. "You can return it later!"

"Dixon's right about watching my step," O'Keefe admitted to himself when the elevator was taking him upstairs to the large, sunny private room where his blonde charge was lying. "Boy! If I got taken off this case it would be a long time before I got a chance to make good with a good-looking heiress!"

"Good morning, Miss Barry," he flashed the old O'Keefe charm as he opened the door. "How's the little nervous collapse progressing this fine morning?" He allowed himself a self-satisfied little sigh of relief as he tied the rubber pad of the pressure machine about her rounded upper arm.

"Are you always so formal with your patients, doctor?" She smiled the way she did with all men—just in case "you make me feel like an old hag."

"I'd tell you that you looked too beautiful to be true if I dared," he said, hopefully, "if the rules of this institution permitted. So I can't!"

"And I'd probably believe you if you did!"

In the surgery annex young Dr. McGrath was at the moment having an acute case of high blood pressure, too.

"You young nitwits who come here to learn to be medical men are all the same!" The head surgeon was having his habitual fit of cholera after breakfast. He imitated a penitent young intern in his pantomime. "Doctor, I can't find my blood pressure machine! Have you seen it?"

"It disappeared, sir," Dr. McGrath took the dressing-down as best he could. "I'll get another as quickly as I can." That was wishful thinking, he knew. They cost the sum of $25—immeasurable to a poor intern!

"If your brain tumor case dies in the meantime it will be just another one of those unfortunate accidents," the head surgeon said. "For this once you may use mine—and I've half a notion to have you placed on the suspension roll for inexcusable negligence!"

"Thank you, sir!" was all McGrath could say.

"I'm sure that you're glad to be going home, Miss Barry," Head Nurse Dixon announced with a placidly which camouflaged her guile as she checked the girl's effects. "I'm sure that I'm happy to see you leaving so soon. Pretty young women like you shouldn't be in hospital."

"There couldn't have been a pleasanter place in which to be ill, nurse," the young heiress assured her. "If you would tell me the custom of rewarding services here which I've received..."

Nurse Dixon flicked an imaginary fleck of dust from the medicine table as she thought. The empty blood pressure case still lay on the table and the little silver plate carried the name of Dr. McGrath!

"The staff are not allowed to accept gratuities, Miss Barry," she said a bit crisply. "But that young man who owns the case on the table..."

What Americans Really Dread About This War Crisis

LIKE LACON and his sons, the nations of Europe are caught in the coils of war and death. One after another, they must fight or die—or both.

With increasing dread the people of the United States watch the struggle.

This dread is not cowardly fear. It is a foreboding that the United States may be unnecessarily drawn into war.

Wise, experienced Americans are not in dread of Hitler, or Stalin, or Mussolini. They know that these conspirators will do wrong and die among their worshippers. Americans do not fear them.

When the anxious eyes of informed Americans are turned to study the signs of coming war they are directed toward Washington.

They know that if the government of the United States exercises wisdom, foresight, resolution, forbearance, courage, impartiality and prudence, this country probably will avoid war.

The reason why these Americans are in dread is because they know the head of their government.

They know that he possesses unprecedented powers and has not used them wisely.

They mistrust his temperament and his judgment.

They note the financial instability of the government and the failure of Mr. Roosevelt to cope successfully with domestic problems.

For these reasons the American people dread the developments of the next few months, before the time when the country can be assured of a competent administration.

A Super-Emergency Ration for War

WHETHER it was Napoleon or some other realist who said that an army fights on its stomach, the dictum has never been gainsaid. Communications between the fighting force and the commissariat are just as vital today as they were when Hannibal crossed the Alps or Grant took Richmond. And what the modern mess sergeant and his cooks dish out for American doughboys and British Tommies has a lot to do with the morale of the men.

Present-day scientists have discovered ways of concentrating life-sustaining ingredients in emergency rations which can easily be carried by soldiers. Containing the proper amount of vitamins and calories, these prepared foods can keep a soldier going in the field for three days without help from the army kitchen.

Dieticians in the United States army are leading the field in developing emergency rations of high food value rating. In a short time, according to a dispatch, British soldiers on the Western Front will be carrying several small tins, one containing pre-cooked meat and beans, one beef stew, one a meat and vegetable hash, and others pulverized coffee, sugar and crackers.

This is the same ration that will be given a two-day try-out during the big military maneuvers soon to be held in Texas. But the army has something else up its sleeve, a sort of super-emergency ration composed of a simple bar made of chocolate, milk, soy bean meal, cocoa butter and maybe the kitchen stove. Three four-ounce bars, each containing 600 calories, are supposed to sustain a man for one day.

It may be a poor substitute for a T-bone steak smothered in onions, but compared to the old corn wheater and hardtack it should taste like ambrosia.

An Amendment That Should Be Approved

THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE of the national House of Representatives deserves praise for voting to stop political organizations from raising money by selling such wares as the 1936 campaign book put out by the Democratic National Committee. That was one of the most scandalous things ever attempted to win the favor and support of those otherwise restrained from making unseemly campaign contributions.

The committee approved an amendment to the Hatch Political Practices bill making it a criminal offense for anyone to "buy any goods, commodities, advertising or articles of any kind or description" the proceeds of which go to a political candidate or political organization.

As the Hatch bill has been approved by the Senate, this amendment, proposed by Representative Vreeland, Republican, of New Jersey, will have to go to conference. It is to be hoped that the conferees will sense the essential decency of the amendment and give it approval along with the main bill. There is regret that this proposed amendment may not become operative for this campaign inasmuch as another House committee amendment defers the effective date of the Hatch legislation until October 1. But, if finally approved, as it should be, it will be better late than never.

The Slow Airplane Has Possibilities

WITH every nation striving to produce bigger and faster planes for military use the advantages of slower, smaller planes have been overlooked by the general public. Maj. Al Williams, who writes aviation news for chain papers, calls attention to them and gives an interesting description of the uses to which the slow-landing plane can be put.

While in Germany, he examined the Storch which had replaced the autogiro in the esteem of the German military group. The Storch, which has been shown in this country, takes off with a ground run of fifty feet and can land with a roll of less than twenty feet. It has wing-slots and flaps which reduce its landing speed to twenty-five or thirty miles an hour. These qualities make it particularly useful in testing out emergency landing fields in captured territory.

Major Williams says these small planes were used by the Germans in the Polish campaign and were extremely useful in establishing new air bases. They are completely worthless as fighting ships but invaluable in the work of discovering and preparing safe bases for the larger planes.

It is Maj. Williams' contention that "the nation that first masters the art of flying slowly will rule the air." It may be argued that in purely defensive action there is no place for a plane like the Storch. But in offensive action, where quick advances are being made into enemy territory, there is much to be said for the plane which can reconnoiter new territory safely. The Germans have apparently given study to the paradoxical advantages of slow-flying in a split-second war.

To people not wholly preoccupied by the war, however, it is the peace-time uses to which the slow plane may be put that are interesting, for it means that the safety factor introduced by the autogiro in private flying will be still further increased.

Politics Is Hampering Merit Legislation

THE ONE THING that can be said of the remainder of the congressional session with complete certainty is that partisan political considerations, far more than the merits of the bills concerned, will be determining factors on every roll call.

The reference is to the principal bills before Congress, aside from appropriations, as the administration and nearly all the members of both parties in Congress hope to bring the present session to an end early in June. That being done, the lines of this year's presidential battle will be drawn. Senators and representatives, and all the active political world besides, can give undivided attention to the national conventions. Meeting June 24, the Republican convention will have the completed legislative record before it. A third of the senators and most House members want to be free to look to their personal campaigns for renomination and re-election.

Bills affected are the Walter-Logan bill, giving the federal courts powers to review the rules under which many commissions and special agencies operate; the measure amending the Wagner Labor act, and Senator Townsend's bill halting purchases of foreign silver by the treasury.

There is an unfortunate disposition to concede that, in the years of presidential elections, "playing politics" must be the decisive factor in Congress rather than the merits of important bills. But dominance of the purely political motive is as deplorable in a presidential year as in any other. The great body of the country's independent voters certainly cannot like it.

A Welcome Brake On the Blatherskite

ANNOUNCEMENT that the Republican national convention at Philadelphia will be "televised"—to use the current barbarism—opens fascinating possibilities. According to Chairman John D. M. Hamilton, the combined resources of the National Broadcasting Company and the Philco Radio and Television Corporation will bring convention scenes to residents of an area within a ninety-mile radius who have television receiving sets.

Although this service is in its infancy, being limited to short distances until relaying stations are established, the prospect that at some future time intimate views of political conventions will be "televised" recalls the influence of radio on oratory. Realization that the sound of his voice was carried to millions of homes put a brake on the blatherskite tendencies of many a speaker. But television, like radio, will not eliminate the demagogue. It will merely compel him to effect refinements in his style.

Miracle in the Heart

I hold a sprig of daphne in my hand, admiring the crisp green leaves, the delicate pink petals, pressing my face to that lovely perfume that is like no other in the world.

I know exactly where that daphne grew, budded, bloomed. . . . The precise spot on this earth. I put it there, and then we left that home. I regretted its loss more than anything else in the garden. But rooted things must stay where they are, and we could not take it with us.

It was a special daphne plant, special to me because I'd tried an experiment on it. You see, for several years after we planted it, it refused to bloom. It took our water, our care, gave only promises of perfumed beauty.

Then someone told me that if I took a knife and girdled its trunk about three-quarters round it would put forth flowers the next spring. It seemed a silly thing to do—to half kill a plant to torture beauty from it. But I tried it, cut the bark away—and that next spring the flowers came and the home was sweet with that flower's perfume. . . . I don't know why or how it happened. All I know is that this living plant, dandied by my knife, drew on some hidden source of strength and burst into bloom.

There came a year when the daphne was lazy once more. And again, the man who had bought our place and that plant girdled it, and again this year it bloomed—and so I hold that sweet harvest in my hand.

I think of this as a strange, a beautiful thing. I give it to you as a living reminder and suggestion, that out of bitterly unwelcome experience may come sweetness and delight. Not always, I know full well, but often enough to prove that this blessed miracle is possible.

telepathy experiments on Stalin, Hitler and a few others who can make all the difference in the world in the happiness of a large part of mankind.

Perhaps Dr. Rhine could read their minds and let us know what to expect. He has certainly done some amazing things in the fascinating and mysterious field of the human mind, as Mr. William R. Hearst pointed out the other day.

Great work is being done in that field. The great Dr. Crile, of Cleveland, discovered that there is an emanation from the substance of the human brain like a ghostly light. Drs. Sheerington and Adrian, of England, have been pioneers in exploring the overlapping domain of electricity and light. But there is so much yet to be discovered, as the late William James pointed out in his book, "Telepathy and the Subliminal Self."

Amazing Experiments
Professor James became interested in the experiments of that strange, half-sinister, half-mediaeval scientist, Charcot, who, in Paris, was carrying on some amazing experiments in hypnosis. Professor James went to Paris and joined in a number of experiments with Charcot, culminating in an uncanny adventure in a cavernous, underground chamber at midnight.

Charcot, a warthy, burning-eyed, be-whiskered Stengall of a fellow, and Professor James required a room removed from all possible penetration of either sound or light, and this was it. The subject lay down on his back on a table and Charcot, whispering in the dark, and lightly touching the man's forehead and eyelids with his fingers, sank the subject into such a state of deep catalepsy, that he lay rigid as a bar of iron. Presently, James records in his official report, previously submitted to scientific societies, there came from the man's right foot and right hand, a soft, wavering, bluish emanation and from his left foot and left hand, a wraith of orange-colored light.

Mysterious Demonstration
The two scientists had with them a little wooden doll, an East Indian fetish, perhaps six inches long. They saturated this in the ghostly light flowing from the subject's body. Then they groped their way twenty-five or thirty feet to the far end of the long dark cell and, with a pin, they pricked the doll in the right foot. "Stop," shouted the subject. "You are hurting my foot!"

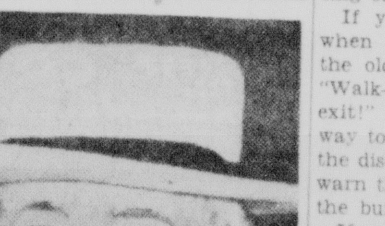

He cried out again when they pricked the doll's right fingers. Professor James ventured no theory in explanation of this weird and mysterious business. But then there were many occult and a few quasi-scientific observations about radiations from the human body. In fact, it is supposed to have given rise to the picturing of halos on the heads of saints. We do not yet know in Hamlet's phrase what reality is "the very coinage" of the human brain, but Science patiently pursues its never-ending quest into the mystery of the mind and the man's march along the road to immortality.

FATTENING UP THE RUNT PIG

Defense against More than Invasion Is Required by the Monroe Doctrine

By MARK SULLIVAN

Just why must we prepare? What is the "why" of the address President Roosevelt made to Congress this week?

Mark Sullivan

The words to observe here are "military," and "armies."

From the military point of view . . . the armies of Europe and Asia do not menace us. To be a menace they must be transported across the sea in ships . . . The armed forces of no foreign nation or group of nations can seriously threaten our continental security if we make sure that we command the seas which separate us from all potential enemies."

Strong Navy Essential

That is quite true, so far as it goes. The emphasis of that is on naval strength, and this is sound enough—again, so far as it goes. A navy strong enough, with adequate supplements of airplanes and shore defenses, could prevent any invasion of the United States by an enemy. It would have to be a very large navy. It would have to be large enough to repel, simultaneously, two or more attempts at invasion. For example, an attempt by let us say Japan or Russia in Alaska, and at the same time an attempt by let us say Germany in Uruguay, South America—which is a third of the way round the earth from Alaska.

When we speak of defending Uruguay in South America, we begin to understand Mr. Roosevelt's address to Congress, and the reason for it. We do not and cannot, limit ourselves to defending the soil of the United States. We must defend the whole Western Hemisphere. We must do it because we are committed to doing it, by the century old Monroe doctrine. We must do it for the further reason that we are pledged to do it, by recent agreement entered into with every one of the twenty other nations of the Western Hemisphere. Finally, we must defend the whole Western Hemisphere because of our own self-interest, because that is the best way, the only certain way to defend ourselves; for a European or Asiatic nation getting a foothold in South or Central America could presently proceed to invade the United States.

Is Well Understood

This necessity, this policy, of defending the whole Western Hemisphere, is now well understood by many—but also is not understood by many, as letters received by this column show.

So we must defend the whole Western Hemisphere. That is certain.

Defend it against what? If it were defense against military invasion alone, against foreign armies, that would be a simple task. Not an easy task, on the contrary an extremely hard task; but a definite task, a concrete task, simple to understand though not simple to do.

But we are going to defend the Western Hemisphere against more than merely armed invasion. We are going to defend it against two other things. The two are mentioned in Mr. Roosevelt's address to Congress:

" . . . protection of the whole Western Hemisphere against invasion or control or domination by non-American nations."

There, in those words, "control or domination," we come to what we must understand. "Control or domination" do not come in the form of a foreign army. They are not something we can shoot a gun at. "Control or domination" are the advance agents of the foreign army. They are what prepares the way for the foreign army, what opens the gate for the foreign army when the thing we have come to describe as the "Trojan horse," the "fifth column."

In Many Forms

In what form would "control or domination" appear in a South American country? It would come not in one form but many. One form would be economic domination. It would appear in any or all of the forms that pave the way for dictator government.

We are going to protect every one of the twenty-one nations of the Western Hemisphere against "control or domination." We are going to do this because we must—because control or domination is presently followed by an army; and because a foreign army, once entrenched on the Western Hemisphere, is immediately a threat to the soil of the United States.

Go back now to the three things we arm against, the three things we are going to protect the American Hemisphere against. The three are, "invasion or control or domination."

Of all three this can be said: Attempt at invasion or control or domination, of any country in the Western Hemisphere, becomes a threat only in case of, and after, one event. It becomes a threat only if Germany wins the war in Europe.

In Same Position

If Germany does not win the war, if Britain and France win, then we will not have the fear against which now we arm. In that event, we are in the same position as before the war. Britain and France already have a foothold on the Western Hemisphere but we do not fear them nor arm against them. With Britain and France winning the war, we have no more need to arm, for protection of South America, than we had two years ago or ten years ago. If a despatch came from Europe this afternoon, saying the Allies had won the war—Congress would not pass the measure Mr. Roosevelt proposed last Thursday, and Mr. Roosevelt would withdraw his proposal.

What we arm against is one thing. We arm against Germany winning the war. We begin to arm at the moment, and not until, and only because there seems possibility of Germany winning the war.

This, I think, is uncontested. From it, a clear conclusion follows.

Morning Motto

If you cannot be happy in one way, be in another, this faculty of disposition wants but little aid from philosophy, for health and good humor are almost the whole affair. Many run about under felicity like an absent-minded man hunting for his hat while it is in his hand or on his head.—SHARP.

Mind Experiments Are Amazing

By HUGH S. JOHNSON

Washington, May 19 — The president's speech on armaments was excellent oratory and a great show.

The stage-man-agement was intended to impress Mussolini. The news from Italy and the Swiss frontiers is menacing. The Germans have 210 divisions. Probably only about 100 of them are yet engaged. Mussolini has another 100 divisions. A smash through Switzerland and of combined German and Italian forces will threaten the Allies with the greatest "piners" attack on record. They are in a precarious position now. This strategy of enveloping both their flanks must be tempting to both Hitler and Mussolini. Yesterdays doubts of this development would have centered on the thoroughly mobilized Swiss defenses. But if a fifth column or a Trojan horse could destroy the resistance of non-German countries like Denmark or Norway, what could it do in Switzerland with a population so largely either of German or Italian stock? We could do with less ballyhoo and whoop-la, but maybe for this and other reasons it was justified.

Hugh S. Johnson

Same Old Stuff

Nevertheless, let's not fool ourselves with these fireworks. Congress should act promptly, but the business of bum's rushing a billion dollar bill through without looking at it is the same old stuff—especially since it gives the President a couple hundred millions lump sum sight unseen. There is no need for any such haste as that. The money can't be gotten into action in the rush that it can be appropriated. It is doubtful if the Navy money can even begin to be spent within the year of its appropriation.

This situation could be remedied, but not with the present system.

The president gave no indication of any change in his present attitude to combine in himself the powers and duties of Secretary of State, War and Navy. Indeed, the requests for personalized appropriations indicates he intends to carry it still further. He is fitted neither by training nor experience to do this present job and he has far too much to do already.

Defense Comes First

If we have not enough plant and shipbuilding capacity, the job is to go out and create them. That is purely an industrial job and nobody in the administration is equipped to undertake it. If we have not enough machine tool equipment, the task is to set up a system of priorities—right now. As was suggested yesterday, similar action in priority of use would release all the skilled workmen from less essential jobs. Defense requirements come before all others. Put that principle into effect and there is no difficulty.

If we fear any shortage of tin or rubber, we ought to begin now conserving them for defense. A large percentage of our normal use of both comes from reclamation. We should begin restrictions on the unnecessary use of both and stop at once the wastage of tin and rubber scrap.

Many Other Ways

All these suggestions are merely by way of example. There are scores of other ways to get this job done quickly and far more economically than it has been done or than there is any prospect of doing it. If our whole problem is, at this stage—industry—now just as much an arm of national defense as the Army or the Navy, it is a job of industrial strategy. It requires experienced industrial strategists and tacticians, just as much as the Army needs Generals and the Navy needs Admirals.

They do not exist in government. I would as quickly consent to entrusting it to a soldier, sailor or politician as I would let one of them cut off my leg, or ask an industrialist either to do that amputation or to run the Army.

We can get the job done, but not merely by appropriating money—no matter how much noise we make about it and not with the present men and organization without expert industrial advice and direction.—Distributed by United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

What Americans Really Dread About This War Crisis

LIKE LACCOON and his sons, the nations of Europe are caught in the coils of war and death. One after another, they must fight or die—or both.

With increasing dread the people of the United States watch the struggle.

This dread is not cowardly fear. It is a foreboding that the United States may be unnecessarily drawn into war.

Wise, experienced Americans are not in dread of Hitler, or Stalin, or Mussolini. They know that these conspirators will do wrong and die among their worshippers. Americans do not fear them.

When the anxious eyes of informed Americans are turned to study the signs of coming war they are directed toward Washington.

They know that if the government of the United States exercises wisdom, foresight, resolution, forbearance, courage, impartiality and prudence, this country probably will avoid war.

The reason why these Americans are in dread is because they know the head of their government.

They know that he possesses unprecedented powers and has not used them wisely.

They mistrust his temperament and his judgment.

They note the financial instability of the government and the failure of Mr. Roosevelt to cope successfully with domestic problems.

For these reasons the American people dread the developments of the next few months, before the time when the country can be assured of a competent administration.

A Super-Emergency Ration for War

WHETHER it was Napoleon or some other realist who said that an army fights on its stomach, the dictum has never been gainsaid. Communications between the fighting force and the commissariat are just as vital today as they were when Hannibal crossed the Alps or Grant took Richmond. And what the modern mess sergeant and his cooks dish out for American doughboys and British Tommies has a lot to do with the morale of the men.

Present-day scientists have discovered ways of concentrating life-sustaining ingredients in emergency rations which can easily be carried by soldiers. Containing the proper amount of vitamins and calories, these prepared foods can keep a soldier going in the field for three days without help from the army kitchen.

Dieticians in the United States army are leading the field in developing emergency rations of high food value rating. In a short time, according to a dispatch, British soldiers on the Western Front will be carrying several small tins, one containing pre-cooked meat and beans, one beef stew, one a meat and vegetable hash, and others pulverized coffee, sugar and crackers.

This is the same ration that will be given a two-day try-out during the big military maneuvers soon to be held in Texas. But the army has something else up its sleeve, a sort of super-emergency ration composed of a simple bar made of chocolate, milk, soy bean meal, cocoa butter and maybe the kitchen stove. Three four-ounce bars, each containing 600 calories, are supposed to sustain a man for one day.

It may be a poor substitute for a T-bone steak smothered in onions, but compared to the old corn waffle and hardtack it should taste like ambrosia.

An Amendment That Should Be Approved

THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE of the national House of Representatives deserves praise for voting to stop political organizations from raising money by selling such wares as the 1936 campaign book put out by the Democratic National Committee. That was one of the most scandalous things ever attempted to win the favor and support of those otherwise restrained from making unseemly campaign contributions.

The committee approved an amendment to the Hatch Political Practices bill making it a criminal offense for anyone to "buy any goods, commodities, advertising or articles of any kind or description" the proceeds of which go to a political candidate or political organization.

As the Hatch bill has been approved by the Senate, this amendment, proposed by Representative Vreeland, Republican of New Jersey, will have to go to conference. It is to be hoped that the conferees will sense the essential decency of the amendment and give it approval along with the main bill. There is regret that this proposed amendment may not become operative for this campaign inasmuch as another House committee amendment defers the effective date of the Hatch legislation until October 1. But, if finally approved, as it should be, it will be better late than never.

The Slow Airplane Has Possibilities

WITH every nation striving to produce bigger and faster planes for military use the advantage of slower, smaller planes have been overlooked by the general public. Maj. Al Williams, who writes aviation news for chain papers, calls attention to them and gives an interesting description of the uses to which the slow-landing plane can be put.

While in Germany, he examined the Storch which had replaced the autogiro in the esteem of the German military group. The Storch, which has been shown in this country, takes off with a ground run of fifty feet and can land with a roll of less than twenty feet. It has wing-slots and flaps which reduce its landing speed to twenty-five or thirty miles an hour. These qualities make it particularly useful in testing out emergency landing fields in captured territory.

Major Williams says these small planes were used by the Germans in the Polish campaign and were extremely useful in establishing new air bases. They are completely worthless as fighting ships but invaluable in the work of discovering and preparing safe bases for the larger planes.

It is Maj. Williams' contention that "the nation that first masters the art of flying slowly will rule the air." It may be argued that in purely defensive action there is no place for a plane like the Storch. But in offensive action, where quick advances are being made into enemy territory, there is much to be said for the plane which can reconnoiter new territory safely. The Germans have apparently given study to the paradoxical advantages of slow-flying in a split-second war.

To people not wholly preoccupied by the war, however, it is the peace-time uses to which the slow plane may be put that are interesting, for it means that the safety factor introduced by the autogiro in private flying will be still further increased.

Politics Is Hampering Merit Legislation

THE ONE THING that can be said of the remainder of the congressional session with complete certainty is that partisan political considerations, far more than the merits of the bills concerned, will be determining factors on every roll call.

The reference is to the principal bills before Congress, aside from appropriations, as the administration and nearly all the members of both parties in Congress hope to bring the present session to an end early in June. That being done, the lines of this year's presidential battle will be drawn Senators and representatives, and all the active political world besides, can give undivided attention to the national conventions. Meeting June 24, the Republican convention will have the completed legislative record before it. A third of the senators and most House members want to be free to look to their personal campaigns for renomination and re-election.

Bills affected are the Walter-Logan bill, giving the federal courts powers to review the rules under which many commissions and special agencies operate; the measure amending the Wagner Labor act; and Senator Townsend's bill halting purchases of foreign silver by the treasury.

There is an unfortunate disposition to concede that, in the years of presidential elections, "playing politics" must be the decisive factor in Congress rather than the merits of important bills. But dominance of the purely political motive is as deplorable in a presidential year as in any other. The great body of the country's independent voters certainly cannot like it.

BACK FROM MEXICO

If you are in a public building when an alarm sounds, remember the old yet often disregarded rule: "Walk—do not run—to the nearest exit!" Running is an almost certain way to start mob panic. If you are the discoverer of a fire in a building, warn the fire department first, then the building's occupants.

If you awaken at night and smell smoke, don't open your bedroom door! That may let in deadly superheated air and fumes. Place your hand on the door, and if it is hot keep it closed. If it isn't hot, place your foot against it, avert your face and open it slightly. If you feel pressure, slam it shut and seek another means of exit. Every occupied room should have such a secondary exit as a basic protection.

Do these rules seem obvious? Perhaps they are—but ignorance or forgetfulness of such precautions cause thousands of needless deaths from fire. That is quite true, so far as it goes. The emphasis of that is on naval strength, and this is sound enough—again, so far as it goes. A navy strong enough, with adequate supplements of airplanes and shore defenses could prevent any invasion of the United States by an enemy. It would have to be a very large navy. It would have to be large enough to repel, simultaneously, two or more attempts at invasion. For example, an attempt by let us say Japan or Russia in Alaska, and at the same time an attempt by let us say Germany in Uruguay. South America—which is a third of the way round the earth from Alaska.

When we speak of defending Uruguay in South America, we begin to understand Mr. Roosevelt's address to Congress, and the reason for it. We do not, and cannot, limit ourselves to defending the soil of the United States. We must defend the whole Western Hemisphere. We must do it because we are committed to doing it, by the century old Monroe doctrine. We must do it for the further reason that we are pledged to do it, by recent agreement entered into with every one of the twenty other nations on the Western Hemisphere. Finally, we must defend the whole Western Hemisphere because of our own self-interest, because that is the best way, the only certain way to defend ourselves; for a European or Asiatic nation getting a foothold in South or Central America could presently proceed to invade the United States.

Is Well Understood

This necessity, this policy, of defending the whole Western Hemisphere, is now well understood by many—but also is not understood by many, as letters received by this column show.

So we must defend the whole Western Hemisphere. That is certain.

Defend it against what? If it were defense against military invasion alone, against foreign armies, that would be a simple task. Not an easy task, on the contrary an extremely hard task; but a definite task, a concrete task, simple to understand though not simple to do.

But we are going to defend the Western Hemisphere against more than merely armed invasion. We are going to defend it against two other things. The two are mentioned in Mr. Roosevelt's address to Congress:

" . . . protection of the whole Western Hemisphere against invasion or control or domination by non-American nations."

There in those words, "control or domination," we come to what we must understand. "Control or domination" do not come in the form of a foreign army. They are not something we can shoot a gun at. "Control or domination" are the advance agents of the foreign army. They are what prepares the way for the foreign army, what opens the gate for the foreign army when the foreign army is ready. They are the thing we have come to describe as the "Trojan horse," the "fifth column."

In Many Forms

In what form would "control or domination" appear in a South American country? It would come, not in one form but many. One form would be economic domination. It would appear in any or all of the forms that pave the way for dictator government.

We are going to protect every one of the twenty-one nations of the Western Hemisphere against "control or domination." We are going to do this because we must—because control or domination is presently followed by an army; and because a foreign army, once entrenched on the Western Hemisphere, is immediately a threat to the soil of the United States.

Go back now to the three things we arm against, the three things we are going to protect the American Hemisphere against. The three are, "invasion or control or domination."

Of all three this can be said: Attempt at invasion or control or domination, of any country in the Western Hemisphere, becomes a threat only in case of, and after, one event. It becomes a threat only if Germany wins the war in Europe.

In Same Position

If Germany does not win the war, if Britain and France win, then we will not have the fear against which now we arm. In that event, we are in the same position as before the war. Britain and France already have a foothold on the Western Hemisphere but we do not fear them nor arm against them. With Britain and France winning the war, we have no more need to arm, for protection of South America, than we had two years ago or ten years ago. If a despatch came from Europe this afternoon, saying the Allies had won the war—Congress would not pass the measure Mr. Roosevelt proposed last Thursday, and Mr. Roosevelt would withdraw his proposal.

What we arm against is one thing. We arm against Germany winning the war. We begin to arm at the moment, and not until, and only because, there seems possibility of Germany winning the war.

This, I think, is incontestable. From it, a clear conclusion follows.

Morning Motto

If you cannot be happy in one way be in another, this faculty of disposition wants but little aid from philosophy, for health and good humor are almost the after effect. Many run about after felicity like an absent-minded man hunting for his hat, while it is in his hand or on his head.—SHARP.

Mind Experiments Are Amazing

By HUGH S. JOHNSON

Washington, May 19 — The president's speech on armaments was excellent oratory and a great show. The stage-management was intended to impress Mussolini.

The news from Italy and the Swiss frontiers is menacing. The Germans have 210 divisions. Probably only about 100 of them are yet engaged. Mussolini has another 100 divisions. A smash through Switzerland of combined German and Italian forces will threaten the Allies with the greatest "piners" attack on record. They are in a precarious position now. This strategy of enveloping both their flanks must be tempting to both Hitler and Mussolini.

Yesterday's doubts of this development would have centered on the thoroughly mobilized Swiss defenses. But if a fifth column or a Trojan horse could destroy the resistance of non-German countries like Denmark or Norway, what could it do in Switzerland with a population so largely either of German or Italian stock? We could do with less ballyhoo and whoop-la, but maybe for this and other seasons it was justified.

Same Old Stuff

Nevertheless, let's not fool ourselves with these fireworks. Congress should act promptly, but the business of bugs' rushing a billion dollar bill through without looking at it is the same old stuff—especially since it gives the President a couple hundred millions lump sum sight unseen. There is no need for any such haste as that. The money can't be gotten into action in the rush that it can be appropriated. It is doubtful if the Navy money can even begin to be spent within the year of its appropriation.

This situation could be remedied, but not with the present system. The president gave no indication of any change in his present attempt to combine in himself the powers and duties of Secretary of State, War and Navy. Indeed, the requests for personalized appropriations indicates he intends to carry it still further. He is fitted neither by training nor experience to do this present job and he has far too much to do already.

Defense Comes First

If we have not enough plant and shipbuilding capacity, the job is to go out and create them. That is purely an industrial job and nobody in the administration is equipped to undertake it. If we have not enough machine tool equipment, the task is to set up a system of priorities—right now. As was suggested yesterday, similar action in priority of use would release all the skilled workmen from less essential jobs. Defense requires combat before all others. But that principle into effect and there is no difficulty.

If we fear any shortage of tin or rubber, we ought to begin now conserving them for defense. A large percentage of our normal use of both comes from reclamation. We should begin restrictions on the unnecessary use of both and stop at once the wastage of tin and rubber scrap.

Many Other Ways

All these suggestions are merely by way of example. There are scores of other ways to get this job done quickly and far more economically than it has been done or than there is any prospect of doing it. If our whole problem is, at this stage—industry—now just as much an arm of national defense as the Army or the Navy, it is a job of industrial strategy. It requires experienced industrial strategists, and tacticians, just as much as the Army needs Generals and the Navy needs Admirals.

They do not exist in government. I would as quickly consent to entrusting it to a soldier, sailor or politician as I would let one of them cut off my leg, or ask an industrialist either to do that amputation or to run the Army.

We can get the job done, but not merely by appropriating money—no matter how much noise we make about it and not with the present men and organization without expert industrial advice and direction.—Distributed by United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Quotable Quotes

By United States Senator Bennett C. Clark, Democrat, of Missouri

I was a member of that committee, and in the hearings before the committee we discovered a state of facts which was responsible for the passage of the act creating the Civil Aeronautics Authority—a state of facts which was deplorable, lamentable, and disgraceful. . . . The occasion for the creation of the Civil Aeronautics Authority was the disgraceful maladministration in the Department of Commerce.

Amateur Robbers Haul Away Oakland Safe, Depart with $200

County, State Authorities Work on Case

Combination and Handle Found Broken on Safe of Coca Cola Company

Oakland, May 19.—When robbers failed in an attempt to force open the safe of the Oakland Coca Cola Bottling Company sometime this morning they just loaded the entire safe on a truck and escaped, hoping they could open it at their leisure.

But county and state authorities are hoping that they won't have much leisure, as an intensive search began immediately after the robbery was discovered.

Investigation today showed the robbers to be amateurs as they broke off both the combination and handle in an effort to break open the safe door. George Williamson, manager of the Coca Cola plant, said the safe weighed in the neighborhood of 500 pounds. He said there was about $200 in the money drawer.

Entrance to the office was affected by forcing the front door and breaking loose the frame. State police gathered fingerprints this morning from some Coca Cola bottles that were moved from the top of the safe, and both state and county authorities began working on the case.

Amateur Robbers Haul Away Oakland Safe, Depart with $200

County, State Authorities Work on Case

Combination and Handle Found Broken on Safe of Coca Cola Company

Oakland, May 19—When robbers failed in an attempt to force open the safe of the Oakland Coca Cola Bottling Company sometime this morning they just loaded the entire safe on a truck and escaped, hoping they could open it at their leisure.

But county and state authorities are hoping that they won't have much leisure, as an intensive search began immediately after the robbery was discovered.

Investigation today showed the robbers to be amateurs as they broke off both the combination and handle in an effort to break open the safe door. George Williamson, manager of the Coca Cola plant, said the safe weighed in the neighborhood of 500 pounds. He said there was about $200 in the money drawer.

Entrance to the office was affected by forcing the front door and breaking loose the frame.

State police gathered fingerprints this morning from some Coca Cola bottles that were moved from the top of the safe, and both state and county authorities began working on the case.

THE CHALETIER: BENJAMIN MERRIFIELD, aged capitalist, lives in the city of Baltimore.

JAYLON DIXON to make love to his grandson.

YESTERDAY: JEREMY begins to learn that pretty young girls can be most attractive.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

MR. JEREMY TUCKER and his grandfather, Mr. Benjamin W. Merrifield, and the latter's companion and secretary, Mr. Wiggins, were the only three gentlemen at the party in evening clothes. And there were not, strictly speaking, formalists; that is, they were no "tails," but were in tuxedos. They were a dignified trio. Jeremy's face, normally too pale from months of work in libraries, somehow had acquired a cherubic pinkness tonight and this made him look almost as young as he really was.

"Jeremy," Gayle Dixon said when he came downstairs dressed, "you are my date tonight and I shall be first to say how handsome you look. You do!"

Jeremy's pink deepened. He swallowed, and stared, and wriggled. Mr. Merrifield, who had overheard, chuckled happily.

"Young sir, can't you say 'thank you'?" he rumbled. "Here, here, my dear, you may look at me and compliment my looks, and I shall try to be more gallant. At once, please!"

She smiled brightly at him and told him he was the handsomest man present or likely to be. In that she was not exaggerating, Mr. Merrifield, at 78, was a striking figure. At the moment he acted kittenish, warning Jeremy that he, the grandfather, was a widower who might himself propose to Gayle before the evening was over.

"I'll elope with you instantly if you do, sir!" he warned him.

The small talk delighted the old man and served to break some of the ice that encrusted poor Jeremy. In truth, Jeremy had been ill at ease about this evening's "presentation" party. He had wondered just what was expected of him. Should he have a date? How should he ask a girl? And what girl—goodness, he knew none, save those now around the mansion here!

But Gayle had smoothly made herself his companion and he was grateful. Somehow he trusted her, liked her, felt more assured in her presence. If a difficult situation arose (as had happened frequently here of late) Gayle knew just what to say and how to say it.

Even so, he could not have anticipated the excitement of the evening. There was a great deal of initial politeness with the girls of the mansion presenting their various guests and with the inevitable get-acquainted conversations. Each couple that arrived brought the ordeal down to him anew.

He could not talk well. Some of the girl guests were dressed so beautifully that they confused him. The perfume they wore was more disturbing than their brilliance of color and their sparkle of person.

THE CHALETIER: BENJAMIN MERRIFIELD, aged capitalist, lives in the city of Baltimore.

JAYLON DIXON to make love to his grandson.

YESTERDAY: JEREMY begins to learn that pretty young girls can be most attractive.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

MR. JEREMY TUCKER and his grandfather, Mr. Benjamin W. Merrifield, and the latter's companion and secretary, Mr. Wiggins, were the only three gentlemen at the party in evening clothes. And there were not, strictly speaking, formalists; that is, they were no "tails," but were in tuxedos. They were a dignified trio. Jeremy's face, normally too pale from months of work in libraries, somehow had acquired a cherubic pinkness tonight and this made him look almost as young as he really was.

"Jeremy," Gayle Dixon said when he came downstairs dressed, "you are my date tonight and I shall be first to say how handsome you look. You do!"

Jeremy's pink deepened. He swallowed, and stared, and wriggled. Mr. Merrifield, who had overheard, chuckled happily.

"Young sir, can't you say 'thank you'?" he rumbled. "Here, here, my dear, you may look at me and compliment my looks, and I shall try to be more gallant. At once, please!"

She smiled brightly at him and told him he was the handsomest man present or likely to be. In that she was not exaggerating, Mr. Merrifield, at 78, was a striking figure. At the moment he acted kittenish, warning Jeremy that he, the grandfather, was a widower who might himself propose to Gayle before the evening was over.

"I'll elope with you instantly if you do, sir!" he warned him.

The small talk delighted the old man and served to break some of the ice that encrusted poor Jeremy. In truth, Jeremy had been ill at ease about this evening's "presentation" party. He had wondered just what was expected of him. Should he have a date? How should he ask a girl? And what girl—goodness, he knew none, save those now around the mansion here!

But Gayle had smoothly made herself his companion and he was grateful. Somehow he trusted her, liked her, felt more assured in her presence. If a difficult situation arose (as had happened frequently here of late) Gayle knew just what to say and how to say it.

Even so, he could not have anticipated the excitement of the evening. There was a great deal of initial politeness with the girls of the mansion presenting their various guests and with the inevitable get-acquainted conversations. Each couple that arrived brought the ordeal down to him anew.

He could not talk well. Some of the girl guests were dressed so beautifully that they confused him. The perfume they wore was more disturbing than their brilliance of color and their sparkle of person.

Today's GARDEN-GRAPH

By DEAN HALLIDAY

FIRM THE SOIL AROUND EACH PLANT

SOAK THE SOIL THOROUGHLY BEFORE PLANTING

5-20

Make use of a shaded portion of the vegetable garden by growing lettuce in it. Since lettuce does not stand heat well, it will do better in that portion of the garden which is at least semi-shaded.

Transplanting is a first step towards "heading-up" lettuce. The soil into which lettuce is to be transplanted should be "padded" thoroughly beforehand. "When the plant has been set in the 'padded' soil, firm the earth about it, as shown in the accompanying Garden-Graph, in order to eliminate air pockets, and because lettuce roots grow better when in firm contact with the soil. For two or three days after transplanting the lettuce it must be shaded from the sun. Remember, too, that in order to "head-up" properly lettuce must have quantities of water.

Lettuce which grows slowly is usually tough, and the faster it can be made to grow the more tender it will be when harvested. Applications of nitrate of soda can be used to stimulate the growth of lettuce.

Constant spraying or dusting will be required from now on to keep roses free from black spot and mildew. Any one of a number of remedies on the market may be used.

Many early blooming perennial plants such as Arabis alpina, Villosa comuta and Iberis sempervirens become straggly after flowering, but will recover quickly if given a shearing back now.

Very tough luck.

Horace M. Byrnes, of Harrisburg, Pa., has developed a change in the convention whereby 4-Clubs becomes the asking bid instead of 4-No Trumps. In reply, 4-Diamonds shows no aces, 4-Hearts one, 4-Spades two, 4-No Trumps three and 5-Clubs four. The 4-Club bidder asks about kings by using 4-No Trumps over lower responses, 5-No Trumps over those which are too high for 4-No Trumps. By this method, the hand shown would be signed off at 4-Spades. A call of 4-Clubs would ask about aces, response of 4-Hearts would show one, and 4-Spades would be the final call. It would be made in spite of the opponents' crazy distribution.

Tomorrow we will present the very latest way of extending the idea presented by Mr. Byrnes, in what we consider the best convention of the kind yet devised.

Or perhaps South would start with 1-Spade, North would jump to 3-Spades and then would come the Blackwood convention, landing the side in 5-Spades. Make use of a shaded portion of the vegetable garden by growing lettuce in it. Since lettuce does not stand heat well, it will do better in that portion of the garden which is at least semi-shaded.

Transplanting is a first step towards "head-up" lettuce. The soil into which lettuce is to be transplanted should be "puddled" thoroughly beforehand. When the plant has been set in the "puddled" soil, firm the earth about it, as shown in the accompanying Garden-Graph, in order to eliminate air pockets, and because lettuce roots grow better when in firm contact with the soil. For two or three days after transplanting the lettuce it must be shaded from the sun. Remember, too, that in order to "head-up" properly lettuce must have quantities of water.

Lettuce which grows slowly is usually tough, and the faster it can be made to grow the more tender it will be when harvested. Applications of nitrate of soda can be used to stimulate the growth of lettuce.

Constant spraying or dusting will be required from now on to keep roses free from black spot and mildew. Any one of a number of remedies on the market may be used.

Many early blooming perennial plants such as Arabis alpina, Villosa comuta and Iberis sempervirens become straggly after flowering, but will recover quickly if given a shearing back now.

A NEW CONVENTION

MANY PLAYERS, who found the Blackwood convention helpful in slam bidding, also have discovered its principal defect—it sometimes crowds the bidding too high. On some occasions it results in a sign-off at a contract of five, which is defeated because of the opponents' cards whereas four would have been safe. At other times it pushes the level so high that only aces may be located and the bidder has to guess at the kings held by the side.

Bidding on that deal, with North-South using the Blackwood convention and the opponents not calling, would be thus:

South 1♦ 1♠ 4NT 5♠
North 1♥ 3♠ 5♦

Or perhaps South would start with 1-Spade, North would jump to 3-Spades and then would come the Blackwood convention, landing the side in 5-Spades. South, of course, would not go to six when he learned his partner had only one ace. West would naturally lead his A and another diamond, which East would ruff. The club A then would set the contract—

Sleep Off Beauty Grievs

By HELEN FOLLETT

BLESSED beyond rubies and riches is the woman who can tumble into bed, fall to sleep in five minutes, never arouse or waken until the little birds start to sing. She cuts down her beauty grievances to practically nothing. Restful slumber makes for a sound nervous system, a jolly disposition and a complexion that withstands the ravages of time.

If you are among the afflicted who toss and tumble, have your substantial meal in the middle of the day, take a light dinner—clear soup, a vegetable, a green salad and a sweet. Avoid extreme fatigue and emotional storms. Charter as calm a life course as you can for yourself; avoid hurry and take your time; don't become indignant over trifles. Many women stay awake nights planning mean things to say to other individuals. In the light of day they appear silly.

Though you must deprive yourself of luxuries, have a comfortable bed, with mattress firm, pillows comfortable, bed clothing warm enough and no more. Have a moving current of air in the bedroom. Relaxation helps if it includes the mind. Make yourself feel heavy. Fancy yourself a log in a deep forest. Many a poor sleeper has trained herself to woo the sandman, overcome insomnia by mental hygiene.

BENJAMIN MERRIFIELD, aged capitalist, hives

JAYLE DIXON to make love to his grandson

FREDMY TUCKER, a shy student of archeology, wiles

BILL BAILEY and six pretty girls are employed to help bring life and youth to the Merrifield mansion.

YESTERDAY: Jeremy begins to learn that pretty young girls can be most attractive.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

MR. JEREMY TUCKER and his grandfather, Mr. Benjamin W. Merrifield, and the latter's companion and secretary, Mr. Weems, were the only three gentlemen at the party in evening clothes. And there were not, strictly speaking, formalists; that is, they wore no "tails," but were in tuxedos. They were a dignified trio. Jeremy's face, normally too pale from months of work in libraries, somehow had acquired a cherubic pinkness tonight and this made him look almost as young as he really was.

"Jeremy," Gayle Dixon said when he came downstairs dressed, "you are my date tonight and I shall be first to say how handsome you look. You do!"

Jeremy's pink deepened. He swallowed, and stared, and wriggled. Mr. Merrifield, who had overheard, chuckled happily.

"Young sir, can't you say 'thank you'?" he rumbled. "Here, here, my dear, you may look at me and compliment my looks, and I shall try to be more gallant. At once, please!"

She smiled brightly at him and did tell him he was the handsomest man present or likely to be. In that she was not exaggerating. Mr. Merrifield, at 78, was a striking figure. At the moment he acted kittenish, warning Jeremy that he, the grandfather, was a widower who might himself propose to Gayle before the evening was over. "I'll elope with you instantly if you do, sir!" she warned him.

The small talk delighted the old man and served to break some of the ice that encrusted poor Jeremy. In truth, Jeremy had been ill at ease about this evening's "presentation" party. He had wondered just what was expected of him. Should he have a date? How should he ask a girl? And what girl—goodness, he knew none, save those now around the mansion here!

But Gayle had smoothly made herself his companion and he was grateful. Somehow he trusted her, liked her, felt more assured in her presence. If a difficult situation arose (as had happened frequently here of late) Gayle knew just what to say and how to say it. He had anticipated the excitement of the evening. There was a great deal of initial politeness with the girls of the mansion presenting their various guests and with the inevitable get-acquainted conversations. Each couple that arrived brought the ordeal onto him anew.

He could not talk well. Some of the girl guests were dressed so beautifully that they confused him. The perfume they wore was more disturbing than their brilliance of color and their sparkle of person-

Many Patients Need To Throw Away Medicine

Doctor Who Is About To Retire Makes Interesting Statement

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

My old friend Dr. Adrian Gibbs says he is about to retire from practice, and the only advantage associated with it is that he can now tell some of his patients what he has been wanting to tell them for a long time. On her own tearful authority, I hear he said to one of them the other day, somewhat as follows:

"Madame, you seem to be suspicious that your stomach is staying out nights and not working regularly at the office as it is supposed to do. You have indigestion, so you say, or dyspepsia, and you have told me about it at great length. In fact, the only time you show any vivacity at all is while you are talking about the delinquencies of your stomach. You are as interested in your stomach as is a mother in a wayward son. You may not realize it, but while you are discussing this fascinating subject you touch rhythmically the place where you think your stomach is with the extended middle finger of your left hand.

Dr. Clendenning will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.

Investigates Stomach

"Now I have investigated your stomach with all the resources at my command. I have removed some of the secretion of your stomach, and while you seem to think it is incompetent, I do not find it so. The sample I examined seemed to be very strong. It was quite capable, I believe, not only of digesting an ordinary meal but even of dissolving one of the buttons of my coat.

"The X-rays that you had taken in New York unquestionably fascinate you, and I don't wonder considering the price you paid for them, but they fail to arouse my professional interest. They look like just another stomach to me and nothing else.

"You have brought me a list of the foods that a distinguished clinic has said you can't eat. It is neatly typewritten, but I have been unable to elicit from you any real reason why you shouldn't eat them. In fact, I may tell you in a semi-professional secret and tell you that your husband called me up and asked me practically with tears in his voice not to give you any more foods you can't eat, because he likes some of the foods on that typewritten list and, according to him, since you got it, you won't have any of them in the house.

"Among the numerous treatments that you have undergone you tell me of the 'no breakfast cure.' You asked me my opinion of that and I will now tell you. For a great many people of my acquaintance a no-breakfast cure would be a very good thing, but for you, no. You need a good many breakfasts in succession. You are thin, you have half starved yourself with your crazy notions and most of your trouble is hunger. Of course, your stomach growls. It wants work. You have forced it into the army of the unemployed.

Should Eat Good Meal

"My advice to you would be that your suspicions about your stomach are not well founded. You have a good, sober, industrious stomach. Your trouble is what you think of your stomach. Nothing, not even a stomach, can stand up under a continuous barrage of contempt and scorn and abuse.

"My first order to you is to eat a meal consisting of everything on that list that the distinguished clinic said you couldn't eat, and eat it with confidence.

"Then go home and empty your medicine chest. Throw away all the cathartics and soda pills and artificial digestants, and greet your husband tonight with a kiss and tell him you feel fine whether you do or not, and that you are going to have cucumbers and lobster and beer and ice cream for dinner, and you want to go to a movie afterwards and then to a hot spot and dance. The shock may be bad for him for a while, but he will survive. Lady, you need to come alive."

Lawns Should Not Be Seeded Late in Spring

Hot, Dry Summer Months,
Are Detrimental to Turf Grasses

College Park, May 19.—Home owners who have been thinking of planting grass seed after May 15 are warned by Mark M. Shoemaker, Specialist in Landscape Gardening for the University of Maryland Extension Service to save their time and money and wait until early fall.

He points out that the hot, dry summer weather usually encountered in this latitude after the middle of June is pretty discouraging to turf grasses. If the grass is to have any chance at all, it must be sown in the early spring or fall. By seeding the early part of March the young grass plants have a chance to mature and toughen somewhat before the hot spell strikes, but if the seed is sown at this date or later the grass will more than likely arrive at the tender, "downy" stage along with the first heat wave, in which case it will be burned up completely by the sun.

Of the two periods for planting, the fall is the better and it is not too early to be laying plans for seeding at that time. It should be done about the first of September.

One of the most necessary conditions for successful grass growth is sufficient organic matter in the soil and steps can be taken now to see that this material is supplied. If a new seedbed is being prepared, organic matter may be supplied by growing a crop of soybeans or cowpeas this summer and turning them under while still green.

Whether seed is sown in the fall or spring, it is essential to use the best quality seed which is suitable to any peculiarities of existing conditions, such as shade, moisture, or type of soil.

Every bag of commercial fertilizer has the chemical contents listed on it. One should read the labels and select fertilizers according to what one desires them to do. A fertilizer that analyzes ten parts nitrogen to six parts phosphate and four parts potash is best for lawns. This formula is frequently abbreviated to read 10-6-4.

"The Fighting 69th" Showing at Garden

The Garden theater's current attraction, "The Fighting 69th," features a cast of five men actors who have had lots of experience in the "service." The action-packed story of the fighting regiment this country has ever had, its characters are all portrayed by the veterans of many service films.

Look at George Brent. He's an army officer now, but he served as an officer in the navy in "Wings of the Navy" and as a submarine commander in "Submarine D-1." Then there's Cagney. James Cagney, of course. He was in "Here Comes the Navy" and "Devil Dogs of the Air," now he's a private again in the "69th."

Pat O'Brien is an old service man. "Here Comes the Navy," "Devil Dogs of the Air" and "Submarine D-1" enlisted him, but now he changes his position to become an army chaplain, the famed Father Duffy of the "69th."

Also on the Garden's program is "The Housekeeper's Daughter," starring Adolphe Menjou and Joan Bennett.

"Girlzapoppin'" Opens At Strand Tuesday

"Girlzapoppin'" comes to the Strand tomorrow and Wednesday. Every act in the show has played such famous amusement centers as Radio City Music Hall, Roxy Theatre, New York, Earl Carroll's Hollywood Club, Billy Rose's Diamond Horseshoe, and many others.

Girlzapoppin' has the famous Frances Allen Dancers who were on tour with Horace Heidt. Mile Rahda appears at every performance. Her "Dance of Ecstasy" created a sensation at Earl Carroll's Hollywood Club. In her "Dance of Ecstasy" she begins where others leave off.

The show's top comedy team Smith and Hart, are the only comedians to play the Roxy Theatre, New York three times within a single year. They recently signed a contract to make three comedy shorts for Paramount.

The supporting cast includes the Avalon Troupe, six people novelty act, Duke Belknap Art, lightning artist, the six D'Arcy's, Robert Moore and his orchestra, the Timpson Jubilee Singers and many others.

Girlzapoppin' promises to be one of the greatest and most talented shows seen here this season.

"Til We Meet Again" Showing at Liberty
Lovers' farewells are hard to say in the movies. For two people who know they'll be going to luncheon together in an hour to temporarily convince themselves and an audience that they're saying goodbye forever is a real acting chore.

Standing alone at a bar in a ship's salon setting at Warner Bros. studio, Merle Oberon and George Brent faced that difficult assignment for a scene of their picture "Til We Meet Again" now showing at the New Liberty.

The set was quiet, with that peculiar stillness which precedes a tense scene. Even the extra players in the adjoining room stopped their tummy game "Action!" said Director Edmund Goulding, and his quiet voice set the mood for the scene. There would be no histrionic fireworks in this goodbye, only repression holding deep feelings under iron leash.

For the girl knows that the heart ailment with which she is affected may snatch her life away at any moment. He carries a secret burden even more heavy, for he is a convicted murderer being brought back to San Quentin, where he is to pay the death penalty for murder. Each is trying to spare the other.

New Picture Opens At Maryland Today

Beautiful women in a struggle for the love of a man who faces prison to save one of them from the same fate, form the dramatic triangle in "And One Was Beautiful," drama of love, sacrifice and intrigues of the smart set, opening today at the Maryland theater.

Based on the novel by Alice Duer Miller, it tells the story of a man who faces prison for a girl, while her sister, who knows the truth, is torn between love for the man and loyalty to the sister.

Robert Cummings plays the man in the case, the part offering him a powerful dramatic part in contrast to his recent comedy portrayal with Sonja Henie in "Everything Happens at Night." The sister roles are filled by Laraine Day, fast-rising starlet who has achieved great popularity as the pretty nurse of the "Dr. Kildare" pictures, and Jean Muir who returns to screen work in this picture following two years on the New York and London stage.

Billie Burke plays the mother of the two girls and others prominently cast include Ann Morris, Esther Dale, Charles Waldron, Frank Milan, Rand Brooks, Paul Stanton and Ruth Tobey.

Man Patients Need To Throw Away Medicine

Doctor Who Is About To Retire Makes Interest- ing Statement

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.
My old friend Dr. Adrian Gibbs says he is about to retire from practice, and the only advantage associated with it is that he can now tell some of his patients what he has been wanting to tell them for a long time. On her own tearful authority, I hear he said to one of them the other day, somewhat as follows:

"Madame, you seem to be suspicious that your stomach is staying out nights and not working regularly at the office as it is supposed to do. You have indigestion, so you say, or dyspepsia, and you have told me about it at great length. In fact, the only time you show any vivacity at all is while you are talking about the delinquencies of your stomach. You are as interested in your stomach as is a mother in a wayward son. You may not realize it, but while you are discussing this fascinating subject you touch rhythmically the place where you think your stomach is with the extended middle finger of your left hand.

Dr. Clendening will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.

Investigates Stomach
"Now I have investigated your stomach with all the resources at my command. I have removed some of the secretion of your stomach, and while you seem to think it is incompetent, I do not find it so. The sample I examined seemed to be very strong. It was quite capable, I believe, not only of digesting an ordinary meal but even of dissolving one of the buttons of my coat.

"The X-rays that you had taken in New York unquestionably fascinate you, and I don't wonder, considering the price you paid for them, but they fail to arouse my professional interest. They look like just another stomach to me and nothing else.

"You have brought me a list of the foods that a distinguished clinic has said you can't eat. It is neatly typewritten, but I have been unable to elicit from you any real reason why you shouldn't eat them. In fact, I may let you in on a semi-professional secret and tell you that your husband called me up and asked me practically with tears in his voice not to give you any more foods you can't eat, because he likes some of the foods on that typewritten list and, according to him, since you got it, you won't have any of them in the house.

"Among the numerous treatments that you have undergone you tell me of the 'no breakfast cure.' You asked me my opinion of that and I will now tell you. For a great many people of my acquaintance a no-breakfast cure would be a very good thing, but for you, no. You need a good many breakfasts in succession. You are thin, you have half starved yourself with your crazy notions and most of your trouble is hunger. Of course, your stomach growls. It wants work. You have forced it into the army of the unemployed.

Should Eat Good Meal

"My advice to you would be that your suspicions about your stomach are not well founded. You have a good, sober, industrious stomach. Your trouble is what you think of your stomach. Nothing not even a stomach, can stand up under a continuous barrage of contempt and scorn and abuse.

"My first order to you is to eat a meal consisting of everything on that list that the distinguished clinic said you couldn't eat, and eat it with confidence.

"Then go home and empty your medicine chest. Throw away all the cathartics and soda pills and artificial digestants, and greet your husband tonight with a kiss and tell him you feel fine whether you do or not, and that you are going to have cucumbers and lobster and beer and ice cream for dinner, and you want to go to a movie afterwards and then to a hot spot and dance. The shock may be bad for him for a while, but he will survive. Lady, you need to come alive."

Lawns Should Not Be Seeded Late in Spring

Hot, Dry Summer Months, Are Detrimental to Turf Grasses

College Park, May 19.—Home owners who have been thinking of planting grass seed after May 15 are warned by Mark M. Shoemaker, Specialist in Landscape Gardening for the University of Maryland Extension Service, to save their time and money and wait until early fall.

He points out that the hot, dry summer weather usually encountered in this latitude after the middle of June is pretty discouraging to turf grasses. If the grass is to have any chance at all, it must be sown in the early spring or fall.

By seeding the early part of March the young grass plants have a chance to mature and toughen themselves before the hot spell strikes, but if the seed is sown at this date or later the grass will more than likely arrive at the tender, "downy" stage along with the first heat wave, in which case it will be burned up completely by the sun.

Of the two periods for planting, the fall is the better and it is not too early to be laying plans for seeding at that time. It should be done about the first of September.

One of the most necessary conditions for successful grass growth is sufficient organic matter in the soil and steps can be taken now to see that this material is supplied. If a new seedbed is being prepared, organic matter may be supplied by growing a crop of soybeans or cowpeas this summer and turning them under while still green.

Whether seed is sown in the fall or spring it is essential to use the best quality seed which is suitable to any peculiarities of existing conditions, such as shade, moisture, or type of soil.

Every bag of commercial fertilizer has the chemical contents listed on it. One should read the labels and select fertilizers according to what one desires them to do. A fertilizer that analyses ten parts nitrogen to six parts phosphate and four parts potash is best for lawns. This formula is frequently abbreviated to read 10-6-4.

New Picture Opens At Maryland Today

Beautiful women in a struggle for the love of a man who faces prison to save one of them from the same fate, form the dramatic triangle in "And One Was Beautiful," drama of love, sacrifice and intrigue of the smart set, opening today at the Maryland theater.

Based on the novel by Alice Duer Miller, it tells the story of a man who faces prison for a girl, while her sister, who knows the truth, is torn between love for the man and loyalty to the sister.

Robert Cummings plays the man in the case, the part offering him a powerfully dramatic part in contrast to his recent comedy portrayal with Sonja Henie in "Everything Happens at Night." The sister roles are filled by Laraine Day, fast-rising starlet who has achieved great popularity as the pretty nurse of the "Dr. Kildare" pictures, and Jean Muir who returns to screen work in this picture following two years on the New York and London stage. Billie Burke plays the mother of the two girls and others prominently cast include Ann Morris, Esther Dale, Charles Waldron, Frank Milan, Rand Brooks, Paul Stanton and Ruth Tobey.

Here's Lillian Russell as portrayed by Alice Faye and seen by artist Tom Webb. Don Ameche, Henry Fonda and others are also featured in Darryl F. Zanuck's production of "Lillian Russell," the Twentieth Century-Fox film... which starts Friday at noon, at the Strand theatre.

Feller in Fine Form as Indians Beat Yanks

Holds New York To Five Hits and Tops Red Ruffing

Pitches to Only 15 Men in First Five Innings

Cleveland, May 19 (AP)—Bob Feller had control today, pitching four-hit ball, striking out six and walking only one, as Cleveland defeated the New York Yankees, 5 to 1, in the first of a three-game series before 27,690 fans.

The Indians' hitting attack was led by Ray Mack and Roy Weatherly, the latter rapping off three hits in three official times at bat, including a triple and a double. Mack's two hits were for extra bases.

Feller allowed no hits until Bill Knickerbocker singled in the fourth, but the Yankee shortstop was promptly retired on a double play. In the first five innings, the Indians' fireballer pitched to only 15 men, three an inning.

Red Ruffing, yielding nine hits as he went the route for the Yanks, suffered his third defeat against two victories. It was Feller's fifth win and his second straight over New York.

Ten Golf Teams in W. Va. Scholastic Tourney

Charleston, W. Va., May 19 (AP)—Ten golf teams, possibly more, will compete here (Meadow Brook Club) on Friday and Saturday for West Virginia's first golf affair for scholastic players.

Thirty-six holes of medal play will determine the championship, with 18 holes to be played Friday afternoon and the 18-hole final Saturday morning.

Teams already entered include Charleston, South Charleston, St. Albans, Dupont of Belle, Gauley Bridge, Madison Moundsville, Parkersburg, Nitro and Sistersville.

But he's coming through, and his case, and that of Hutchinson, again prove that the price tag isn't always a true yardstick of a ball player's value.

Maybe the Athletics will get $45,000 worth of service out of Benny McCoy, and possibly the Dodgers will be put out for Roy Cullenbine.

But on the other hand, what did the Cubs put out for Dizzy Dean? $85,000?

WILD BILL BOYD, above, heavyweight protegee of Jack Dempsey, appears against Gus Dorazio, of Philadelphia, in the top bout of the four 10-rounders on the Rooney-McGinley All-Star fight show at Forbes Field, Pittsburgh, next Tuesday. Dorazio has defeated Harry Bobo, while Boyd holds a knockout victory over the Pittsburgh negro.

The other feature bouts will show Fritz Zivic against Ossie Harris; Irish Jimmy Webb against Johnny Kapovich; and Lloyd Marshall against Tony Cicco. Promoter Art Rooney expects at least a $30,000,000 gate.

COUNTY TRACK MEETS THIS WEEK; THOUSANDS ENTERED

Thousands of Allegheny county boys and girls will converge on the Cumberland Fairgrounds Thursday and Friday for annual public school track and field meets, and the Board of Education has been busy the past week making preliminary arrangements for the two programs.

Three meets, running simultaneously, will be staged Thursday, while the junior-senior high school commutator out of the prize rookie of 1939.

Late in 1938 the Major League clubs began to take notice of a nineteen-year-old boy who was burning up the Pacific Coast League as a pitcher for Seattle, and as this Freddie Hutchinson plied victory on victory there was a wild scramble among scouts to make a deal for him.

He ended the campaign with a record of twenty-seven victories and only five defeats, and in the furious bidding for his services the Detroit Tigers were successful. They gave four players and cash estimated at upwards of $50,000 for him.

He was the fair-haired boy of the winter months. Story after story was written until the fans knew everything about him from what he ate for breakfast to the color of his neckties.

Under this barrage of publicity he had two strikes on him when he reported at the Tiger camp a little over a year ago, and rumors began to seep out that he was just a lucky thrower; that he had a "nothing" ball, and that was all.

We visited the Tiger camp early in 1939, and found his teammates noncommittal. They didn't say yes and they didn't say no, but you gathered the idea that they had their doubts as to what young Freddie could do. He was a "control" pitcher, and when he didn't have that he didn't have anything.

As the days went by Hutchinson's control vanished, and finally Del Baker gave up on him and shipped him to Toledo.

He was back at the Detroit camp again this year, and there were hopes that he would stick Baker, with his pitching staff a big question on mark, gave the youngster every chance, hoping fervently he would come through.

Freddie was started against the Athletics, who promptly lathered his offerings. Baker thought it might be just one of those things that happen to any pitcher, so he gave him another chance. This time it was the siege-running Boston Red Sox, and again the Seattle lad was knocked out.

And now he's been shuffled off to Buffalo, and Detroit is wondering if it ever will cash in on the heavy investment.

If it never does, it can gain some consolation by just imagining it paid out the money for Harold Newhouser, who right now seems to be headed for a successful career in the Majors.

Newhouser cost the Tigers nothing. He's a Detroit boy, reared just a hoot and a holler from Briggs Stadium. He was no great shakes as a pitcher with Beaumont last year, winning only five while losing fourteen, and there was some eyebrow lifting when he was taken to camp this spring.

But he's coming through, and his case, and that of Hutchinson, again prove that the price tag isn't always a true yardstick of a ball player's value.

Maybe the Athletics will get $45,000 worth of service out of Benny McCoy, and possibly the Dodgers will be put out for Roy Cullenbine.

But on the other hand, what did the Cubs put out for Dizzy Dean? $85,000?

Jimmy Bowen scored a two-round knockout over Frankie Ward of Lynchburg in their scheduled six round bout at Appomattox, Va., CCC camp Saturday night, his manager, Sgt. O. R. Oxford reported last night.

Bowen, local welterweight, is scheduled to fight next month in Pittsburgh, according to Oxford.

Local Welterweight Wins Return Bout by KO

Philadelphia, May 19 (AP)—Ben Warren's ninth inning single with the bases loaded, two out and the score tied at 5-5 gave the Phillies a 6 to 5 decision over the last-place Pittsburgh Pirates today in their series-opener.

Floyd Young almost won the game for Pittsburgh with an eighth inning home run with one on. Young went in at second base for Frank Gustine, knocked unconscious during pre-game practice by a badly bouncing ball and his circuit blow put the Pirates temporarily ahead, 5 to 4.

The Phillies took a 2-run lead in the first and scored another in the second on Heinie Mueller's triple and a wild pitch by Joe Bowman.

Pittsburgh got one of these back in the fourth and the Pirates tied the score with two out in the fifth. Klein broke the tie after two were out in the fifth with his third home run of the season.

Bimelech Fails To Live Up to Advance Notice

Defeat by Corydon Shows Bradley Colt Is No "World-Beater"

New York, May 19 (AP)—There must be quite a bit of polite snickering going on today down in Big Red's barn on Sam Riddle's farm near Lexington, Ky.

For Bimelech, the colt they all said was going to make the folks forget Big Red—Man O'War to you—has proved he doesn't bat in the same league.

In fact, off his defeat by the extra-lightly regarded Corydon in the Withers Mile at Belmont yesterday, the best that can be said for Bimelech right now in the matter of "greatness" is that Man O'War was a pretty fair country horse.

His Second Failure
Make no mistake now—that's an "I" in Bim's name, not a "U." He's a good race horse and has proved it by winning nine of his eleven outings and placing second in the other two. He may, provided he remains sound and keeps right on running, even so to challenge Seabiscuit's money-winning record. But he'll have to do lots better to be rated with Big Red, or before him, unbeaten Colin.

Up to the Withers, the only setback suffered by Col. E. R. Bradley's three-year-old had come in the Kentucky Derby, when the outsider Gallahad beat him a length and a half. And most folks, after watching Black Tony's last son come back a week later in the Preakness, were willing to regard the Derby business as more or less of a "duke."

Unimpressive Saturday
But yesterday, with 29,842 fans—the largest crowd of the New York spring season—watching him, Bimelech not only didn't have the stuff to win against Mrs. Payne Whitney's colt who charged up from last place in the backstretch, but was lucky to poke his nose in front of Joseph E. Widener's Speedy Racer for second money. As in the derby defeat, Jockey Freddie Smith said the "cuppy" condition of the track was the reason, yet the track was officially "fast" and in the race before the Withers, Dr. Whitney had stepped six furlongs in a snappy 1:10 4-5.

What with the customary classy riding of Eddie Arcaro helping things along, the son of St. Germain not only "busted" the Bimelech bubble, but, by taking the "overland" route from last place, he showed a lot of running. He returned the season's high of $87.00 for $2 to the few who bet him in the win and he added $16,650—the winner's purse—to Mrs. Whitney's bankroll.

Petersburg Cops League Honors In Grant County
Petersburg, W. Va., May 19 (AP)—The Petersburg High baseball team brought its season to a close last week with a 5-2 victory over the Bayard High Tigers on the local field.

The clash was the third of the season between the teams and was a "rubber" contest for the Grant county scholastic championship. The Vikings ended their campaign with a record of seven victories and three defeats. Last season, Petersburg was undefeated in a dozen skirmishes.

Guy Turley, pitching for the first time this year, hurled a nice article of ball and allowed the Tigers only two singles. He struck out nine and issued one base on balls.

Moorefield Hi Nine Has Banner Season
Moorefield, W. Va., May 19 (AP)—Moorefield High School's Potomac Valley scholastic baseball champions closed their season here on Friday with an 11-3 victory over the Harlowing match No. 2—Dewar Course (individual) metallic sights, 20 shots at 50 yards and 20 shots at 100 yards.

Match No. 4—1:30 P. M.—Dewar Team Match, 20 shots at 50 yards and 20 shots at 100 yards.

Match No. 5—To the winner (The Cornish Trophy). Aggregate of matches No. 1, 2, 3.

Note—If time allows there will be a 50 yard individual offhand match of 20 shots.

Rifle and pistol clubs which will have teams competing in the meet are: District of Columbia, Frederick, Maryland, Three State, Towns American Legion, Izaak Walton, Tundeco, National Capitol, all located in Maryland and the District of Columbia; Morgantown, Mannington and Fairmont, W. Va., clubs, and Little Washington, Pa.

Other clubs will have individual representatives or groups in the meet. All the member clubs of the league will be represented by teams.

GOP Delegates Reveal How Revolt Started

Glenn Beall Named To Represent State At Philadelphia

Western Maryland county delegates took part in the revolt in the Republican state convention at Baltimore which came within an inch or two of forcing the retirement of O. E. Weller as Republican national committeeman.

Details of the opposition to Weller as it developed in the caucus of the Sixth congressional district, comprising Allegany, Garrett, Washington, Frederick and Montgomery counties, were disclosed by the delegates on their return from Baltimore Saturday night and yesterday.

Much of the opposition to Weller developed in the various district caucuses held prior to the convention in parlors designated for the sessions on the second floor of the Southern hotel. The opposition was pronounced in the Sixth district caucus, being started there by D. Angle Wolfinger, aggressive attorney of Hagerstown.

Lowndes Supporters Upset
Similar opposition cropped up in other district caucuses and despite efforts of the Weller and Nice forces it had gained much headway by the time the convention got off to a start at noon at the Auditorium theater.

Leaders were aware of the impending fight the night before and a series of conferences took place at various places on different floors of the Southern, where the contending factions had established headquarters and where most of the convention delegates from out of the city were quartered.

At one time a compromise agreement was under consideration whereby Tasker G. Lowndes, of Cumberland, would be supported for national committeeman, but this was upset by an untoward development in the Fourth legislative district in Baltimore City. After that the opposition centered on the selection of Wendell Allen, Baltimore attorney, who was permanent chairman of the convention.

Shouting and Confusion
That was the plan in hand when the revolt came to a head amidst considerable confusion and shouting by the opposing forces late in the afternoon at the convention after practically all the formal business of the body had been transacted.

When the revolt reached a point where it appeared certain that a vote by the convention would unseat Weller, Allen walked out on the opposition, declaring he would not be drafted and that if chosen he would immediately resign.

But Wallace Williams, of the Cecil county delegation, who had started the fight on the floor for the selection of Allen, continued beligerent and was on the point of forcing the issue to a vote when a sudden vote for adjournment, aided in adoption by the chairman, shut off the fireworks and the delegates began to scamper out of the theater.

Williams is the man who was Republican nominee for United States senator in 1932 against Millard E. Tydings.

Wolfinger Leads Revolt
The opposition to Weller came to a head in the Sixth district caucus when Wolfinger obtained the floor and declared that it was the sense of the Washington county delegation that there should be a new national committeeman. No successor was suggested, Wolfinger stating that only a change was desired in the belief that a more aggressive man should have the position. He offered a motion, but was ruled out of order. Later after action had been taken on the selection of national convention delegates, Wolfinger offered a formal motion reading as follows:

Resolved, That the two delegates chosen to the national convention be instructed to vote for a change in the position of national committeeman and that neither the holder of a political office nor a candidate for any political office be chosen for the position.

Verbal Battle
This started a lively discussion as to the advisability of putting the motion in the form of a resolution denying the sense of the caucus or whether it should carry positive instructions. J. Glenn Beall led the fight against instructions and a shuttlecock and battlere exchange ensued with Beall, Wolfinger, Nelson W. Ruesler, of Allegany county and Walter Dawson, of the Montgomery county delegation, taking part. Finally Wolfinger and Dawson both demanded a roll call of the counties. This resulted in a unanimous adoption of the resolution.

According to the roll call, Allegany county cast seven votes for the resolution, Garrett county four votes, Washington county seven votes, Frederick county six votes and Montgomery county six votes. It had been previously arranged to have the county delegations vote on the unit plan.

George Henderson, chairman of the Allegany County Republican State Central Committee, was chosen chairman of the Sixth district caucus. Nelson W. Ruesler, of Allegany, vice-chairman; and William L. Geppert, of Allegany, secretary.

National Delegates
Following organization, the first business was the selection of national convention delegates. Upon motion of Walter Dawson, seconded by Nelson Ruesler, Lawrence Fraley of Garrett and J. Glenn Beall of Allegany were unanimously chosen convention delegates.

For convention alternates, Andrew K. Coffman, of Washington,

Four Republicans Come Home Refugees

Four prominent Allegany county Republicans came back from the Baltimore convention as refugees of a blitzkrieg, but they came back in style.

The blitzkrieg was on J. Glenn Beall's automobile, which was stolen from a parking lot while the former chairman of the State Roads Commission was participating in the political maneuvers going on in the Southern hotel.

Stranded with Refugee Beall were William A. Gunter, of Cumberland; G. Kear Hosken, Frostburg jeweler; and Benjamin Evans, Lonaconing theater operator.

The parking lot company came to the rescue, bought the refugees B&O tickets to Cumberland, and furnished them with taxis to take them to their doorsteps.

Last but not least, Baltimore police notified Mr. Beall last night that his car had been recovered.

Barbers Elect Driscoll Again

State Convention In Hagerstown

Hagerstown, May 19 (P)—Fred B. Driscoll, of Cumberland, was re-elected President of the Maryland and District of Columbia Journeymen Barbers Association at the annual convention here today.

Other officers named were: Secretary-treasurer, A. R. Bixler, of Baltimore; vice-presidents, William Groves, of Cumberland; A. C. Patterson, of Baltimore; J. C. Swain, of Cumberland; Tony J. Durso, of Washington; Angelo Ruocco, of Washington; John Rallo, of Baltimore; R. R. Atkinson, of Washington; Roy Griffith, of Cumberland; Borden B. Lindberg, of Washington; M. A. Dize, of Baltimore; and Theodore Weis, of Baltimore.

A proposed legislative bill designed to better conditions for the barber and public was approved by the delegates. A measure now pending in Congress, which regulates wages and hours of barbers in the District of Columbia, was discussed.

Mayor Richard H. Sweeney made a welcome address at the opening business session this morning.

The principal address was delivered by Frank W. Wiebel, of Pittsburgh, sixth vice-president of the Journeymen Barbers International Union.

county and Dr. David G. Everhart, Sr., of Frederick, were chosen by unanimous vote. Coffman, a veteran Republican leader, is chairman of the Washington County Republican State Central Committee.

For presidential elector there was no opposition to Dr. U. G. Bourne Jr., urologist physician of Frederick.

For national convention alternate-at-large, Kingman Brewster, of Frederick, was unanimously chosen. Wolfinger also brought about the adoption of another resolution by the caucus, embodying indirect criticism of the inactivity of the state central committee. This asked that the Republican State Central Committee of Maryland be called together at convenient intervals in order that the county groups may be placed in a better position to carry on the activities of the campaign.

The Allegany county delegates who served as such at the caucus and on the floor of the convention comprised J. Glenn Beall of Frostburg; Walter Ross, of Midland; Benjamin Evans, of Lonaconing; Cecil Smith, of Belle Grove; Nelson W. Ruesler, of Cumberland; William L. Geppert, of Cumberland, who held the proxy of Miss Elizabeth L. Lowndes; and A. Dewey Mull, of Ellerslie.

The Allegany county delegation took a decisive stand in the convention proceedings when squabbles in the Third and Fourth Baltimore city legislative districts were brought to the attention of the convention. Anti-Nice forces had captured party of the delegates on the selection of national convention delegates. In the Fourth district it was alleged that a rump caucus had been held; in the Third two sets of delegates were chosen and offered to the convention.

A lengthy discussion ensued as to whether the convention delegates should decide which set of the delegates should be accepted, or whether each district should decide it. In the ensuing wrangle Allegany county, through Nelson W. Ruesler, advised that the issue in each district be decided on the basis of home rule by the simple method of polling the delegates. That ended the scrap in the Third district delegation and it was applied to the Fourth with the issue there being decided on a division of nine to ten in the delegates.

Cumberland Plane Builders Have Their Own Production Worries

Heidel Boden, student at Fort Hill, carried off the honors in the main event of the Exchange Club's model airplane meet at Mexico Farms Saturday.

Boden won when his gasoline-driven plane stayed in the air for a minute and 29 seconds on its first flight, while two of the four planes entered developed engine trouble and the third cracked up.

Eugene Watkins, who was flying a plane with a wing spread of more than eight square feet, was the unlucky "pilot" who cracked up when his motor stalled before the plane had gotten well into the air.

J. B. Herron, of LaVale, and Donald Keiser, of Crystal Park, couldn't get their motors going when time came for the race.

Boden, who lives at 218 Oak Street, didn't send his plane aloft the second time after the competition folded up.

Hundreds of youngsters swarmed on the field for the event. More than a score of planes were entered in the races for rubber-driven models.

Winner of junior class B (for planes with wing area of less than 150 square inches) was Francis Browning, 427 Greene street. Time was not recorded for his flight.

Winner in senior class B was Jack Rowan, 124 Seymour street.

State Game Warden E. Lee LeCompt, who ordered Kenny's dismissal, was present.

The dismissal followed Kenny's arrest by city police, who charged they found him with a woman in a North Mechanic street house.

Kenny, represented by Attorney Ben F. Epstein and Frederick A. Puderbaugh, denied any wrongdoing.

Blitz Hits Stock Market and List Declines Sharply

Week's Decline Is Widest Since Week of July, 1934

New York, May 19 (P)—Wall Street's own version of a "blitz" stroke—the destructive outburst of selling in security and commodity markets last week—made another episode in a momentous drama of economic change.

Even against the past decade's background of tremendous financial and trade upheavals, the collapse of speculative markets on the news of the German dash through the low countries into France stood out as an historic incident for the money street.

The week's decline in listed share values, measured by the Associated Press composite price of sixty stocks was the widest for any similar period since July, 1933.

Unlike 1933, however, the week's break was not preceded by a great spurt of public speculation in a full swing. For months, the stock market had been wedged in a narrow range, cautiously eyeing news from the Western front for a hint of real war.

A shower of selling from Amsterdam markets accounts dispelled the long calm.

As the break-through the area of stabilization widened, the position of many margin traders was endangered. Distress selling from such accounts sped the decline. A collapse in grains interacted upon security markets. The old circle of liquidation was witnessed.

O'Connor Dedicates Ritchie Memorial

Annapolis, Md., May 19 (P)—Governor Herbert R. O'Connor said today at dedication ceremonies for the Albert C. Ritchie memorial that this monumental mound will stand through the years as a constant reminder of the personality and career of our late great governor.

Several hundred persons attended the ceremonies at the memorial located in the center parking area which divides traffic on the Ritchie memorial highway at the north end of the Severn river bridge.

O'Connor said that the state would be richer as long as this memorial shall endure, because it will ever be a vital reminder to all our people of the nobility of purpose and the superiority of achievement of one who typified the Maryland tradition to the fullest.

Chief Judge Carroll T. Bond of the Court of Appeals made a brief presentation speech and the memorial was accepted in behalf of the state by O'Connor.

A negro picked a policeman's car for a robbery last night—but he might have done worse.

The officer was notified, and captured the negro in Shantytown with the stolen articles in his possession. Meister brought the negro to jail, but charged him with being drunk, instead of with being a thief.

Cambridge invited the club to meet there next year. The executive committee will make the decision later.

The delegates heard addresses by four women, all of whom concerned themselves with the importance of democracy and all of whom were obviously conscious that all existing forms of democratic government are potentially subject to very real and very threatening danger.

"The gravest challenge to our democracy is the fact that people do not really and truly believe in it," Dr. Naomi Riches, of the Goucher college faculty, told the women at the legislative breakfast this morning. Dr. Horace E. Flack, secretary and director of research of the State Legislative Council, explained the purpose and work of the council.

State Police Commissioner Beverly C. Ober brought greetings from Governor O'Connor, and Mayor Richard H. Sweeney welcomed the delegates to Hagerstown at the banquet held Saturday evening and attended by over a hundred women.
